#4142 – What insignificant thing did someone say that stuck with you forever?

Whenever we'd leave my Grandma's, she'd always say "you know you can always come to Grandma's house". The love she had given to me is a love I'll never experience again. I miss her so much.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)

The love she had given to me is a love I'll never experience again.

The thing about love, and the best thing by far -
It fills up your life like the light from a star.
And though it must end, or depart and move on -

The light keeps on shining long after it's gone.

Had a jacket I loved that I wore for years.

I was standing in line in Chipotle to get lunch one rainy afternoon and the kind gentlemen in front of me accidentally took a step backwards on to my foot.

He turned around to apologize but caught himself and instead said, "Holy shit, bro! Back here looking like some kind of super hero! Like you fell outta End Game or some shit! Looking good!"

Kind sir. I will never forget your enthusiastic compliment. It was just the boost I needed to get through that day and it has helped me through so many others.

That jacket I loved that sparked the comment has since been worn to shreds. I still have it because I can't bring myself to get rid of it... in the hopes that maybe someday, someone with enough skill will be able to recreate or even just restore it.

Edit: to all those asking, I appreciate you. I'm out of town at the moment but when I'm back, I will be sending out a PM with a few pictures of the jacket if you've asked to see it. Thank you. The internet can be such a kind place.

I will never forget your enthusiastic compliment. It was just the boost I needed to get through that day and it has helped me through so many others.

He looks in the mirror.

He pauses a while.

"Good morning, good morning,"

he says with a smile.

"And who is this glorious hero I see?"

He waits for an answer.

He whispers: "... it's me."

When it's too tall to bite. Hate that. Make burgers wider, not taller.

I will die on this hill with you brother.

/u/Evolving_Dore

As long as the hill isn't too tall

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]

“I’d climb beside your side, my friend,
I’d step the stones above -
I’d take your trail until the end,
With hope and faith and love!

“I’d roam the open road, my dear,
To roll with only you -
And when you looked, you’d find me near,
Your stalwart, standing true!

“I’d give my heart, my oath, my all,”
He spoke and raised his head -
And saw the hill was rather tall.

”... on second thought,” he said.

#4139 – What is the most pleasant non sex or drug related experience a human can have?

2025-03-22 13:54:29

/u/BubbleTrouble_Z

/u/I-Am-Disturbed

Farting away a stomach pain.

When I feel a rumblin' under,
like a blast of bowel thunder, or I sense a bottom burble from below -
When I get a fetid feelin' like a ripple or a reelin',
as the juices of the deuces start to flow -

When it comes upon a second,
like a buttock badly beckoned, or a derriere with somethin' rare to say -
Then I close my eyes and do it, open up and get down to it,
part my cheeks and fart the tummy pain away!

As a kid, that was always an adventure! Which kid could find something for the lowest price!

Fwiw, I never for a second thought we struggled with money. My parents made sure my brother and I never knew. They're true superheroes.

| They're true superheroes.

Some parents are bitter.

Some parents are blue.

And some are unbearable,
terrible too.

Some parents are thoughtless,

And others unfair.
And some are inconstant,
And some never there.

Some parents are vicious.
Some parents are hard.
And some leave you lonely,
And some leave you scarred.
Some parents are lazy,
And others unkind.
And some only wreck
And corrupt what they find.

Some parents are awful -
But others are not.
They give and they give
And they give what they've got.
They hold you together.
They show you what's true.

We don't get to choose them.

I'm glad I had you.

This is the opposite of what usually happens, but I thought it was pretty funny. My boss was away on business and I managed a tea shop near a Starbucks years ago. This kid came in (he was from abroad) and said he was supposed to start today. We were hiring and I trained him, etc. My boss came back two days later and had no idea. The kid was in the wrong place, but he stayed with us. He was hired on the spot without even applying.

Girl I was dating had zero interest in sports, while I loved football. As a gift very early in our relationship she bought me tickets to a football game. As she was giving me the tickets she said “so the book said 50 yard line 25 rows up are the best seats, so that’s what I got”. She then pulled out a book about football that she had clearly read and had notes all over it about key things to know. She had bought a book to learn the sport just because she knew I loved watching it and wanted to be a part of it. The tickets were great, but her doing that made her 100% more attractive and instantly made me fall in love. No one had ever done that type of thing for me before. And we are actually celebrating our 3rd wedding anniversary today!

She looked at his smile and she whispered:

“I did.”

Captain "Mad Jack" Churchill, a professional soldier in World War Two, who went into battle with a claymore sword, bow and arrows, and sometimes his bagpipes, all of which he was highly effective with.

/u/Hoskuld

Didn't he bitch about the Americans joining and cutting the war short?

/u/Hilarious_Disastrous

He said we had a good war and could have kept it doing for a few more years.

They gathered round, and arm in arm,
They waved adieu to death and harm -
They bid goodbye to guns and shells,
And with relief and fine farewells,
They raised a glass to hope and peace,
And wars that end
and strifes that cease.

Except for one.

“Mad Jack”, by name.

He shook his head and whispered:

”... shame.”

In the 80’s, often during an after dinner party discussion and drinks, my grandpa used to say that he hadn’t masturbated since 1932.

When someone would exclaim, ” wow! That’s a long time,” he’d respond with, “not really, it’s only 20:42 right now.”

Though the future is uncertain,
And the future's hard to see -
Though the future is a curtain
Oft concealing what may be -

Be there sadness,
or there sorrow -
Be there gladness,
or dismay -
What might come to be tomorrow
Might not be the same today.

You can never know what's waiting,
For the future's shaded strange -

But I'll still be masturbating.

... and I never want to change.

I was in a few very LT relationships and those ladies liked it when I gave them a little slap on the butt.

Early in dating my current gf, she was on top and I gave her butt a little slap. Without stopping her motion, she sits up and slaps me in the face hard.

"How do YOU like that?"

Quite a lot it turns out.

Coming into work on my day off.

/u/Flashy_Spell_4293

Omg this is a good one!!!! there are people at my work, who will come into the restaurant and eat on their days off lol I just think to myself, don't you have any place else better you can go to lol you'll be here tomorrow when you're working. Or I will tease them, you missed Olive Garden that much, huh?

I have a coworker that always likes to tell us if we're not leaving our homes when we take a day off we might as well come into work instead of staying home. And coincidentally the days she pulls that on us are days of potlucks and she wants to share her cooking.

Ma'am sometimes I just like to do nothing for a day and stay home and I'd rather hang out with my friends and animals than come into work.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)

Ma'am sometimes I just like to do nothing for a day.

"I'm awfully sorry," he said in reply:

"No matter whatever I venture to try -

My diary tells me today is the day!

I can't rearrange it,

so what can I say?

"I've looked at my plans and I've checked on my list -

But such an occasion as this can't be missed!

You see, I'm aware it's been coming a while -

And won't be postponed!"

he explained with a smile.

His boss simply sighed at the end of the phone.

"You don't have a car and you live on your own -

So what are these plans that you can't change ahead?"

"... I'm filling tomorrow with nothing," he said.

When I am dead, I say: forget.
And don't lament and don't regret.
For if you find my bottled pee -

I will be way too dead to see.

When I am dead, I say: be well.
And know I won't be there to tell.
For if you look beneath my bed -

I will not care.

I will be dead.

Road rage. Guy I went to middle school with jumped out of his car and beat a guy he was road raging with so badly that he was partially paralyzed by the end of it.

Guy was 19 and got a 45 year prison sentence. Completely fucked his whole life up and will only have a few years in the outside, and that's if he's lucky and lives that long.

/u/sleepyRN89

My idiot ex had terrible road rage. He bragged one day that someone pulled a gun on him for a road rage incident and was apparently “too chicken” to pull the trigger. He thought it was funny. Fucking dumbass.

/u/TheRealJackReynolds

My friend had an ex like that. Road raged so hard at a woman one day, he told my friend to pull up alongside her at a light. My friend was (naturally) scared and didn't do it. Can you guess what happened?

This guy gets out of the car during rush hour with hundreds of other people around and makes this woman get out of her car, then fucking PUSHES her. All with a smile on his face. People like this are unstable. She's lucky he never physically took his anger out on her.

This guy gets out of his car in rush hour with hundred of other people around...

When Little Timmy got the rage,
He didn't sigh and smile -
He didn't wait or act or his age,
Or simply pause a while -

He raved behind his target car -
He raced with wild delight -
He traveled fast and traveled far,
Until they reached a light.

"I've got you now," he softly said,
And pushed his door aside.

Then stepped into the road ahead.

And Timmy fucking died.

I dream it again
and I think of us then, in a moment of silence I keep -
A comforting time,
like a song or a rhyme
that returns as I drift off to sleep.

I wonder serene as I wander between all the moments that wait in my heart - But most I recall from that ill-fated fall is the cooties which broke us apart.

i choked on a piece of seaweed salad while i was home alone. i realized it was NOT coming out at all and i looked in the mirror and i was turning blue and suddenly realized i was not breathing. i'd been trying to expel it for several minutes at that point and i coildnt.

in a moment of complete panic and survival i threw myself against the side of my bathtub multiple times until i forced the piece out. i puked straight into the tub and sobbed lol i was terrified i saw my life flash before my eyes over a piece of seaweed salad.

i got up after like ten minutes and walked around and drank water but then noticed my abodoen was throbbing and i could barely see. i went to the ER and i broke a rib! and also severely strained several capillaries in my eyes i guess. the doctors were very concerned about me and were like you know you could have died. like thanks i think i understand that.

it was the scariest thing i've ever been through but i survived!!! i don't eat stingy food alone anymore.

Dream of love and laugh and cry.

Then you eat a leaf and die.

#4118 – What is your best dating or sex advice for someone inexperienced?

2024-01-01 17:01:08

/u/_ _ _ _ K _ _ _ _

/u/Crusty_Dingleberries

The real life is not porn. and expectations are not that you last 90+ minutes in 20 different positions and whatever else. You're both responsible for clearly communicating what you want, what you don't want, what you're okay with, and what you don't or do want to try.

If you don't tell your partner what you like, they'll just forever be forced to guess. So speak your mind - tell them if they need to do something differently, and be sure to ask them what they want you to do.

If something goes "wrong" like there are pussyfarts, or someone's sweating, or the guy comes prematurely, anything that isn't what you expect, or isn't "cool" then you shouldn't make it embrarrasing, so in cases like that, it's just key that you are open and make it okay for the body to do what the body does.

If she has a queef and is embarrassed about it, his job is to make sure she feels like it's okay and that he isn't judging it, and similarly if he can't get it up or whatever, her job is to help rather than judge and/or make fun of him, and to make sure that he feels it's okay.

As for performance, in my experience, it's something that comes with maintenance. If you as a guy cum too fast, you will most likely start to notice that if you have sex with that person several times to the point of doing it daily or several times a week, you'll end up lasting longer.

Sometimes the first fuck with a new person is always going to be some awkward democratic sex where nobody really knows what the other party wants or likes, so you can't give them what they want, but as you have sex more and more with that same person, you get better at giving them what they want.

Real life is not porn.

“Is something wrong?” she pondered, shy,
To hear a deep, despondent sigh
Beside her tossed and tousled bed -
He cleared his throat, and bashful, said:

A session starts, and in between,
There’s ten positions, maybe more,
With countless cries and gasps galore!

“In all the films, they’re round and round,
And up and down with endless sound
Of pleasure-filled expectant glee,”
He said: ” ... or so it seems to me.”

With crooked smile, she raised a hand -
”Okay,” she said, “I understand.
The problem’s this -

Take a shower. Brush your teeth. Smell nice.

Trim your nails as well. Be gentle and do not underestimate foreplay. Take your time.

| Trim your nails as well.

When Little Timmy made a date
For planned romantic time -
He said, "I must eliminate
The merest hint of grime!"

But when the laddie looked below,
His digits made him pause -
Alas, they made a horror show
Of jagged finger claws.

"I might have let them grow a bit,"
Declared the luckless Tim -
"Perhaps," he said, "it's time to sit
And give them all a trim!"

And so it was he sat and made
A start on one with pride.

Which shot off like a sharpened blade.

And Timmy fucking died.

All the dumb, embarrassing crap that you did that comes back to haunt you when the insomnia kicks in?

And late he lies awake in bed,
A whirl of worlds inside his head
That slowly wane away in sleep,
And dance beyond the dark and deep.

He boards a floating boat of dreams,
And sails along the silver seams,
And all the cares and doubts of day
Dissolve
and dim
and drift away.

He rides along a tide of stars,
A ship, a trip to Earth and Mars,
Where all the morning's fears and more
And all his woes are all before.

He moves beyond the black behind
Without a thought to fill his mind,
Except for one -

He rubs his eyes.

"... I loathe myself," he softly sighs.

/u/UsesCommonSense

Spending too much time worrying about love and not enough time concentrating on happiness.

/u/newenglandredshirt

Absolutely. I got married young to someone I loved who was abusive. It took me a long time to leave. Now, I'm actually learning how to be happy.

/u/StunningSun3384

Same. 33 years spent trying to get him to love me and meet my needs. Now I'm divorced, and I'm happier than I ever knew was possible. It truly is up to you to make your life happy; not someone else.

We were together since I was 16, and he was 17. I'm 51. I feel like my life is just beginning again, and I'm both terrified and excited beyond belief.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]

You dreamt of jobs and kids, a wife,
And luck in love, and love for life,
And all above,
and even more,
In dreams you thought you waited for.

You dreamt of things you hoped were true,
And things you always thought you'd do,
And when you did,
You dreamt each night
Of what could be, and what just might.

And when, at last, you filled the mold
With things a future's meant to hold,
You looked around one day and knew -
You never really dreamt of you.

But now's the time to dream again.
The chance to find yourself and then
To carve a path to call your own -

To live a life that's yours alone.

If you're in a car that goes into a body of water, wait until the car fills with water so the pressure equalizes and then open the door and swim out.

DON'T DO THAT !!! You have enough time to open the windows and crawl out. Even enough to get a kid out if you hurry. Cars sink in a predictable manner and the circuits don't short out right away. The windows work, as soon as you hit the water open the windows and get out. If you wait you don't know how long or how far you will be under, if the car will be right side up or wedged in rocks. Just get out right away.

Source: my buddy did his masters thesis on this.

If you wait you don't know how long or how far you will be under.

When Little Timmy made a turn
Which should have been a right -
He saw the waters softly churn
And twist before his sight.

And as his car began to sink,
He paused a while or two -
Then clapped his hands and said: "I think
I know just what to do!

"I've found out how to forge ahead,"
The hapless lad declared -
"I simply have to wait," he said,
And so he sat, prepared.

He watched the water reach his knee,
And let it rise with pride -
But Timmy's car was in the sea.

And Timmy fucking died.

#4108 – What’s a subtle sign someone’s actually really wealthy?

2023-12-26 17:09:04

/u/fossilnews

I unknowingly had dinner with a billionaire couple. Afterward I was told about their wealth and I realized:

- Their clothes were bespoke. Everything fit like a glove.
- Their nails were perfectly manicured.
- The wife was not wearing normal jewelry.
- They insisted on picking up the bill.
- They tipped $100 on a $180 receipt.

They were both legitimately nice people and I genuinely enjoyed talking/dining with them.

/u/short_bus_genius

How did you end up having dinner with billionaires that you didn't know were billionaires? Honest question. I'm curious about how this situation comes to being?

/u/GeminiTitmouse

Years ago, I worked as an installer for an interior design company. I'm just an average middle-class suburban dude, the company was run by a middle-class suburban family. But they were well-established, very high quality, and we did work for some of the wealthiest people in Houston. We contracted to the designers who contracted to the clients, so that's how we were allowed entrance into the upper echelons... but then we also did work for just average neighborhood folks. Anyway, sometimes we did out of town jobs. Wealthy people who had lived in Houston and moved wanted to fly out their designers and contractors to fix up their new places. One time, we were flown to an unassuming mid-size Midwestern city to do a job for an old client. The house and property were very nice, but compared to some of the jobs we'd done, nothing extraordinary. The people just seemed like an average old couple (aside from the mansion), wife was nice, husband was reserved and uninterested in talking to us. She treated us to dinner at a local little Italian restaurant, and we rode there in her little crossover suv.

Turns out the husband had an extensive history as chairman and/or CEO of 3 of the biggest corporations in the world. Like Illuminati level capitalist. And y'know we're just eating snack mix in this guy's kitchen saying "nice to meet you".

These people aren't showing off for the plebs lol.

Also, I don't think we were engaged in money-laundering with any of our jobs, but who knows...

/u/trazom28

Those are the best kinds of wealthy people. I used to work for a larger midwestern retail company. One of the CEOs worked his way up from the stores. Yeah, his house was a little on the bigger side but by no means a mansion. He drove a pickup truck with a cap and his wife drove a sedan. He parked in employee parking with the rest of us. He was respected because he earned it and was super approachable and easy to talk to. After he retired, the company was never the same and eventually went bankrupt

Small talk. It's a good way to start getting to know someone because you can't get into "deep" stuff right away as that's most likely gonna make the other person uncomfortable. Also most people just like being social, even if it's a surface-level interaction.

/u/MrsTurtlebones

In my work I interact with about 30-50 people per day for about 5-10 minutes, and not a day goes by that I don't learn something interesting from at least a couple of them. I have always enjoyed anecdotes/vignettes/slice of life tales, which is part of why I love Reddit, but the small talk leads to these being shared with me constantly by customers.

Yesterday a woman told me that she was one of six children, and over 50 years ago she took her mom to the store to show her a specific sweater, down to the color, that she wanted for Christmas. Imagine her surprise on Christmas morning when she learned that her mother had indeed gone back to purchase it . . . for her older sister. Ha! Her mom didn't do it maliciously but had simply gotten mixed up. Laughing, the woman told me that it looked beautiful on her sister.

Now, that is not information or a fact, but it was still a fun story from long ago and certainly that type of pleasant conversation helps people connect and decreases a sense of loneliness or isolation. Chatter away at me; I'm listening!

[/u/Poem\_for\_your\_sprog \[Link\]](#)

| ... Chatter away at me; I'm listening!

When I'm bundled up with chatter,
And I've words I haven't said -
Then I have a little natter
With the people in my head!

If it's just a moment only,
Then I'm certain you can see -
I am never truly lonely
When I'm on my own with me!

But if chance should come to bare it,
Or declare and air it true -
Then I'd really rather share it
With another, such as you.

You're not who you were,
so whenever I do -
I think of you mostly as some other you.
Comparable features but mixed with a twist -
The same, but observed through a smoke or a mist.

I wait for an end that I picture with grief -
And some other feeling akin to relief -
Lamenting the winter which followed your fall.

Of course I still love you.

I'm tired, is all.

People in the restaurant industry seem to develop substance abuses very frequently. I don't think the industry attracts those people, but rather the stress of the job combined with the availability of alcohol and other drugs create the perfect storm.

/u/GSV_CARGO_CULT

To a degree the industry does attract those types of people, in my experience. Restaurants are meritocracies, more than most other workplaces, and if someone can get the plates out on time they'll be hired, whether or not they went to chef school. The good side of that is that people who don't have the privilege of money or connections can work their way up, in that classic American Dream kind of way. The bad side is that it attracts a lot of drunks and wild people.

If you enjoy a whole-day shift -
If you can get your plates out swift -
If you attempt to cope with stress
With drink and drugs and nothing less -

If you can gladly ply your craft
While underpaid and understaffed -
If you can man a kitchen twice
As hot as hell and half as nice -

If you can do the work of four
From dawn till dusk or maybe more,
While sacrificing all for speed -

Then baby, you're the one we need!

Had a one night with this girl, pulled out and the condom had split. I was lay there freaking out while she was saying how excited she was to be a mum. She kept messaging me for a few weeks after that asking my opinion on names and if I wanted it to be a boy or a girl etc. All the while I was freaking the FUCK out.

/u/Churbuddahbread

/u/PaulsRedditUsername

I was abducted outside my cousin’s wedding reception. It’s all very hazy. There were two of them and they carried these powerful hand torches they kept shining in my face. They could speak a rudimentary form of English. They kept asking questions about how much I had been drinking. (I presume because Earth is a water planet, they had questions about what we drank.)

Contrary to popular belief about anal probes, one of the aliens kept trying to make me put my pants on, not take them off, but I couldn’t find my pants just then. The other alien—who seemed to be in charge—kept talking about “disturbing the other wedding guests” and he tried to abduct my champagne bottle.

Their spacecraft had a lot of bright lights on it, mostly red and blue. They took me to their mother ship and put me in a holding area with some other humans they had also abducted that day.

The next thing I know, it was morning and I was standing on the pavement downtown outside the police station. I was very fuzzy-headed, but physically unharmed. The whole experience gave me a terrible headache. Then I threw up on the bus.

[/u/Poem\_for\_your\_sprog \[Link\]](#)

I think of it often,
the sound and the light -
The shadows that came in the shade of the night -
The figures with lasers that hung at the hip -
Who forced me to put on my pants in their ship.

I think of the query I whispered with woe -
"Are you going to probe me?!"
They said to me: "... no."
And still I remember that curious day -

When aliens fined me and sent me away.

Anyway the girls used to come into my bar once their shift was over for a well earned drink and so I got to know some of them pretty well. Inevitably conversation would turn to their clients kinks. Two spring to mind. The High Court Judge who came in to be spanked and be told he needed to be punished. Not that exciting, but the one I can never forget was the "peanut butter man". He would come in the day before with a massive bag of peanuts for his favourite girl and book an appointment the next day where the girl would shit on him and he would smear it all over himself saying "I'm the peanut butter man" over and over. I actually got a similar response at work. When I finally told people I was pregnant (around 4-5 months), this old dude came up to me to say congratulations. He then said “oh this makes sense because I thought you were just ... you know? ... your waist was getting a little ...” I don’t think he meant anything mean by it, but it still caught me off guard. My kid ended up having the same birthday as him.

/u/fredy31

Was in this dude situation.

Coworker announced, a week or two before my first day, she was pregnant.

So it was old news when I came in.

So no maybe 3 months in, well, belly starts to be unavoidable. It's pretty clear it's not a fat, but pregnant belly.

You don't want to fuck up that question. So yeah, I did not say shit before a coworker mentioned it

/u/RiverLiverX25

Have a take on this. People who speak a lot about wanting "honesty ... Just be honest with me."

Ok will do.

Was honest. Got eye rolls, harsh defensive talk, and gaslighting back: why didn't you tell me sooner? sounds like you are hiding things!

No. This was the honest conversation and this was the appropriate time to have it.

When someone talks a lot about wanting honesty, it's seems there may be a reason that people are not honest with them and why they have an issue with it. Not sure.

They usually like speaking truths, and keeping it real but they so do not like hearing truth and can not take truth well or graciously from others.

They want to give it without question, not receive it

Now when someone brings up the honesty thing too much, it's a red flag.

If you're ever lost in a large forest (in the northern hemisphere), look for the North Star.
It's twinkling will comfort you as you die.

Moss only grows on the South side of trees, unless it's leap year then it's on the east. But don't forget on Easter it changes to the North.

Once you've figured that out, then find the nearest birds nest and eat the eggs.

When Little Timmy lost his way
Across the forest floor -
He wandered aimless night and day
For half a week or more.

He tried to find a stream to track,
Or plot a path with ease -
But always found it brought him back
To nothing more than trees.

"I think I know a fact," he said:
"A thing to figure out -
The perfect means to move ahead
Whenever you're in doubt!"

And so he stood and stared at all
The stars to find his guide.

Alas, he never could recall.

And Timmy fucking died.

Age. As a teenager I could sleep all weekend. From about 30 I never needed an alarm clock as I would always wake up before I needed to. At around 40 I started waking up around 0630 and it gets earlier every year. I'm now almost 60 and am generally awake around 0430 and up and running by 0500 regardless of how late I go to bed. If this trend continues I will be getting up before I've gone to bed. There are times like weekends when I wish I could sleep in but overall I enjoy being up early. Sunrise, coffee and peace are nice.

If this trend continues I will be getting up before I've gone to bed.

At midnight tomorrow he headed to bed -
And woke up today with the sunrise instead.
"My goodness," he whispered, and went back for more

And rose from his pillow the evening before.

"Well this is stupendously silly," he spoke -
"My system for sleeping is totally broke!"
He turned in his covers to slumber again.

And woke in the morning.

But heavens knows when.

They can shape me how they want to,
They can bend me to their will -
I shall be an idle vessel
Full of empty space to fill.

Give me stances and perspectives
Or opinions indiscreet -
And I'll echo them forever
And forever on repeat.

I shall never want for freedom,
Nor desire a voice to share -
You can keep your self-reliance,
For I simply do not care.

/u/MarsaliRose

I just tore my psoas bc I sit all day and it was weak asf. I never knew you could tear a muscle from under use. Two months of excruciating pain, three weeks of PT and I'm finally getting better. But yea, stretching and yoga are top priority for me now.

/u/coca-colavanilla

People don't realize that not using their muscles is often the cause of their pain. I used to be a dancer, and when I stopped I had knee pain, back pain, neck pain, foot pain. I thought it was from overuse in my dancing days, and I'll admit I got super lazy at my desk job. I went to a chiropractor for years because it offered relief, but the pain would come and go. I started aikido just a few months ago, and all that pain is just gone completely, except a bit of middle back pain (likely from the desk job). I'm confident if I keep at it the back pain will go too. It's like magic, except it's not magic. It's just using the body the way you're supposed to /u/jmerridew124

EDIT: thank you redditors for the overwhelming response and for the anonymous gold.

to be honest, this thread moved to the “left lane for passing” discussion, it wasn’t the goal of my response.

my response is more about how a tailgater will dramatically increase the risk of an accident versus being patient and sharing the road with others.

100% of accidents are when 2 objects want to occupy the same space. and the logic of getting closer to the object in front of you at relatively high speed seems illogical to me.

/u/SaveusJebus

The way some people drive makes me really hate driving. I always point out bad drivers to my kids and why it’s bad driving so hopefully they’re not one of them when they’re older.

I don’t know what has happened within the last 5-10 years, but it definitely seems like more people are driving like assholes now. It’s rare for me to see someone actually stop at a stop sign. I’d even settle for a rolling stop where the person slows down a lot, but even that is asking too much apparently. Like just straight up slightly slow to sling around a turn.

/u/tensigh

When Little Timmy rode the road,
He said, "I think it's fine -
To drive as though it's road I'm owed,
As if the road is mine!

"And if I choose to drive behind
A person going 'slow' -
Then to my simple, addled mind,
It's right behind I go!

"Perhaps I'll speed them up," he said,
With open hope and pride -
So Timmy chose the car ahead.

And Timmy fucking died.

/u/Original-Salt9990

This is why the hate Americans regularly get for being “uncultured” or “untravelled” is so ridiculous.

I live in Ireland, at the periphery of Europe, and even from here within five hours of flying I can get to about two dozen different countries in Europe. Hell, even from where I live within Ireland I probably drive to a few different places like Northern Ireland, Scotland, England or Wales depending on ferry times.

In most of the US you can drive for five hours and not even get near an international border, sometimes barely even leave the state.

On top of that, within the US you can see almost every kind of geographical biome in the world (not all of course, but a lot). In Ireland I can only see one kind of climate and that's it. If I want to see deserts, jungles, forests, lava fields or anything like that I need to travel quite a distance to other countries to see them so the incentive for me to travel widely is far greater than that for an American.

It's honestly such an underrated part of living in the EU, being able to freely travel to about 25 or so different countries with minimum hassle at the drop of a hat. It's absolutely awesome.

Jesus was given vinegar to drink by the Roman. It turns out that the roman military provided their troops with a water/vinegar mixture to drink because it helped them replenish their salt levels after perspiring. So, the only thing the Roman did was to offer Jesus a sip of his own drink rather than making him drink vinegar as punishment or a dig.

/u/A_Talking_Shoe

Yeah, that whole story has much more to it than the McDonald's propaganda would have you believe.

From what I remember, that McD's location was serving coffee way hotter than they were supposed to and they knew it. They had been notified of that too but continued to serve scalding coffee.

When the victim spilled her coffee, it was so hot that it essentially fused her thighs together. You can find photos online of her injury and it is no joke.

I believe she also only sued for the cost of her medical bills but the jury determined she deserved much more which led to however many millions she received.

#4020 – What do you think of the parents that kick their kids out as soon as they have turned 18 years old?

2023-02-24 17:46:45

It's their right, but I disagree with it.

I was kicked out the day I turned 17. I lived out of my car for 3 months while working fast food and completing my senior year. I would've probably dropped out had it not been for my best friend's dad. He found out about the situation and forced me to move in with them. He wouldn't take no for an answer. He had recently got divorced because his stay-at-home wife was cheating on him. Because they had a spare bedroom and I was friends with both his sons that lived with him, he told me "It's just us guys living there and having fun. You stay until you finish school. After that, you can pay $100 a month in rent until you decide what to do. Don't argue with me."

The man's a saint. I wouldn't have been able to keep going to school without him, and he knew it. He's a guy who had to drop out to work back in the day to support his family. He got his GED and clawed his way up to head engineer at a factory so he could afford a nice home for his wife and kids. He bought a nice two-story home that he barely got to stay in for a woman who didn't appreciate him. The man even came home every single day and cooked meals for us to make sure we'd eat.

In the middle of fighting a divorce, trying to get custody of both of his kids, and keep the house he paid for, he took me in, adding to the stress. He did that for me just because I was friends with his sons. If I ever get rich, that man is getting an early retirement and a comfortable home wherever he chooses. If that man can do all that for someone that isn't his child, parents have no excuse for not helping their own kids out.

Edit: I had no idea this would blow up this much... thank you, everyone. I just wanted to answer some questions that are being asked.

This was years ago and I still bump into them from time to time, but we've all drifted apart in these years due to adult lives being... busy, lol. I still talk to them every once in a while. They are still my friends and I can hit them all up any time I wanted to. I still play Xbox with the sons a few times a year. I always make sure to have them tell their dad thank you for me. I had a serious heartfelt talk with him about a year after I graduated and moved out. I still think about that man nearly every day of my life.

As for my family, I was not a perfect child at all and I have some blame. The thing is, I honestly feel I never would have been the way I was in my later teen years had they been more accepting of myself and my lifestyle. I saw my other friends being able to come to their parents and talk to them without fear of judgement from them, or God. Ultimately, religion is the reason I was kicked out. They are strict southern Baptist.

I did cut my parents out of my life for three years after I was kicked out. They never contacted me for the first year. They tried to reconnect after the first year, but I have them two more years of silence. I let them back in my life, but on my terms. It was easy to make my demands considering I didn't need them anymore. We now have a healthy relationship. We can finally look each other in the eyes and be honest. I no longer fear their judgement, that's honestly the ingredient we were missing in our relationship.

I now spend a decent amount of time with my father and mother. It's funny, my dad and I actually have long conversations about our different ideologies and beliefs. We even poke fun at each other about it. It's nice, considering I never actually was able to connect with him much growing up. I'm the first male in the past 5 generations of my family that didn't become a southern Baptist pastor. I think my father sees it as opportunity to understand how people living a different life than him are. And i see it as an opportunity to better understand why he did what he did. A lesson i had to learn the hard way is that it's better to seek understanding than to live with hate in your heart. He respects me and I respect him.

It was hard for my mom at first. She comes from a small town of 300 people where everyone goes to church happily and believes anything their parents tell them. She would be abrasive with me at first when I would talk about how I drink, or live with my girlfriend. Hell, she still does from time to time, but my father always nudges her into calming down.

Edit 2: I keep seeing people say “it’s not their right” which I understand, but it’s not really an argument wish pursuing. As a 17 year old who just got kicked out, I didn’t want to get the police involved. That meant either I move to a foster home an hour or two away, and then lose my friends as well as my family. That or they force my parents to take me back and life just gets worse. I was happier living in my car. As scary as it is being a kid on your own, it was better than the alternatives.

To keep them safe and give them voice,
When times are troubled too -

If you can meet and know their needs,
To hold them free from pain -
Or guide them through when pain succeeds,
And help to bear the strain -

If you can hope to never part,
And swear inside you won’t -
Then raise a child and share your heart.

But if you can’t... then don’t.

"Just how many lives I can ruin by noon?
I'm hoping for dozens!
I'll have to start soon!

"I wonder," he said, "and I'm eager to know -
Just how many moments I'll escalate, bro!
Just how many people I'll fuck with for fun?
And how many times I can take out my gun?"

"And if I am lucky," he whispered with awe -
"Perhaps I can kill in the name of the law?
And then, when I've finally finished today -
I'll drive home this evening... suspended with pay."

I had made my time migration
To a moment long ago -
For I had a dark temptation,
And I simply had to know.

Though perhaps you'll think it shady,
There I shared a night between -
With the very finest lady
That I ever dino-seen.

I rejected every warning,

I recently came out of a surgery where they gave me that present. It actually wasn’t bad. I couldn’t feel it during recovery for the most part. It was scary when it was time for removal. The nurse said, “Now, I can’t say this isn’t gonna hurt. Ready? On three!”

I bit my finger and was expecting to pass out from the pain. But it didn’t hurt at all. Totally anticlimactic.

I used to be a driver for a funeral home corporation. Like, drive the hearse and pick up the bodies. Never had anything creepy happen, a few funny things, a few traumatic things. In general it was a chill job. However. I did get incredibly uncomfortable one night picking up a man who died at home, he still had the defibrillator leads on his chest and his eyes were closed, which is unusual because the eyes are always open. He just looked like he was asleep or unconscious. Not rigid or pale or anything.

I just had this sinking feeling for about half an hour in traffic that he was going to suddenly gasp and wake up in the body bag.

Then it hit me.

That would be the coolest thing ever. I'd take him home and he'd be back with his family. So I just kind of drove slowly and turned up some music and sang along and talked to him. When I got him to the funeral home I left him out of the cooler for about an hour while I did paperwork and played on my phone. When I got another call I checked on him and his limbs had started to stiffen. I was kind of bummed. I put him in the cooler and went on my next call.

Why do public restrooms include a small opening between the doors that allows passersby to see you when you’re taking a piss?

/u/crazytumblrweed999

There are a few reasons for this.

1) You need to be able to see who's inside/outside in case it's a dear friend/bitter rival and you might wanna enjoy a toilet dance together or fight to the death.

2) 98% of all toilet pornography is filmed this way.

3) These passages allow for ventilation.

4) They are made by the lowest bidder and its cheapest not to close this gap.

/u/nicht_ernsthaft

I would say Nestle, but if that happened it would probably only be a few years before one of their competitors fill the void in the market and behave exactly the same or worse. So now we have massive evil Chinese/Belgian/Brazilian company instead of evil Swiss one. What we need is better systematic reform of international regulation of corporations and true global justice or we will just be playing musical chairs.

It would be satisfying to see their whole board and major shareholders in solitary for the rest of their lives, but that's not practically going to fix anything.

Golden roses lit the night air, burnt the land and boiled the sea - so it seemed amidst the nightmare
Battle of Serenity.

Years will pass and men will seek boats sailing to a thousand parts - colours fade from scars and brown-coats over time, but not from hearts.

Shepherds search for their salvation, brothers look to family - some have coin for motivation, others live for living free.

So it is you'll see the firefly as she sails without a sound - through some wind-swept distant night-sky, bringing smuggled goods to ground.

First-mate Zoe, Wash and Kaylee, Simon, River, Book and Jayne - risking death and perils daily
'cross the 'verse,

in search of gain.

But it seems the war's returning.
River's plight might end the crew.
Haunted muttered words concerning
"Two-by-two" and "hands of blue."

And, no matter where they're going, what their worlds or fortune brings - troubled winds are always blowing round the firefly's broken wings...

#3960 – What is legal and should become illegal? 2022-10-16 12:55:59

/u/cucutz

/u/thrww3534

It should be illegal to blatantly lie to voters while running for political office. We call it fraud and jail people for lying in order to gain financially. Yet we call it normal and allow politicians to lie in order to gain votes for political offices, offices which not only benefit them financially but also give them enormous amounts of power to benefit and detriment others.

Then we wonder why political office seems so often to attract the most fraudulent, sociopathic, and dishonest among us. We basically have a neon sign over our political system saying, "If you enjoy committing fraud and are a pathological liar, please apply here... we will let you deceive as many of us as you possibly can for more money and power than you can dream of."

Well, see that's why politicians in the past used to be smart about it. They wouldn't outright lie, but they would tell half-truths, or just skirt the truth just enough so if you try to fact check it, there may be a basis for whatever the statement is. Nowadays though, fuck, these assholes don't play around anymore. They just flat out lie. And the shitty thing is that we no longer have sufficient journalists that do their jobs in holding the powerful accountable and checking them on the bullshit they spew.

Like, man in the last Presidential election, during the debates I so often thought "Shit, I so want them to be able to provide real-time fact checks during the debate! Like when they ask a question to a candidate and they just lie or even say shit like "No I never said that" even though they have, just have the moderator be like "Just go to the tape". It would be so easy to have some people in the control booth to just run checks on the candidate's statements.

You’ll give them whatever it is that they need!
You’ll make any choice that they want you to make - You’ll walk any path that they want you to take!

“And when they’ve discovered you’ve filled them with lies -
You’ve hidden the truth from their innocent eyes -
You simply deny what they’re claiming and then -
You have an election and do it again.”

/u/HuggableMuffin_2

The best advice I have (that really helped me) is to think about everything you're experiencing. Rather than just genitals and the feeling there focus on the other senses as well. The feel of your partners skin on yours, sounds, smells, even the feel of the sheets. It amps up the pleasure, makes things last a lot longer, and gets to be more fun. Also, changing positions can help delay things while still giving you BOTH enjoyment. :)

Also, being 38 helps haha

/u/Fearless-Search8200

I agree with this. Your getting down voted by people with no experience. Its all about keeping your mind occupied I usually just focus on my rhythm, taking a step to appreciating everything she has to offer and really focusing on her instead of just how wet and warm it is, IS DEFINITELY THE KEY TO SUCCESS IN THE BEDROOM. Quick cummers are slaves to their own mind

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)

I usually just focus on my rhyme, taking a step to appreciating everything she has to offer ...

“Our hearts beat together - our breaths were the same -
We kissed in the darkness, and kindled a flame -
Our bodies were one in the warmth of her bed.”

She stared at me, silent.

Sorry who is this?

"My dearest," he wrote,
"As I pen you this note,
I'm inclined to remember the breeze -
How we felt it that day,

And the soft summer way
That it blew through the leaves on the trees.

“We were beautiful then,
And I told you again
That I’d love you in sunlight or snow -
And I made you a ring
With a circle of string
From the flowers I tied in a bow.

“Will you love me,” you said,
”When the flowers are dead,
And our lingering shadows are long?”
And I said that I would,
For I knew that I could,
And I’m sorry I treated you wrong.”

So she read what he wrote,
And she folded the note
That he’d sealed with a penitent kiss -
And she picked up her pen,
And she pondered and then
She inscribed at the bottom:

“who dis?”

Not wanting kids.

When a man is good with kids and/or wants kids some day, he is called “a catch” (you know, in combination with other good traits), meaning that the opposite (not being good with kids and/or not wanting kids some day) is common and normal, but not great.

A woman who does not want kids or is awkward with kids is seen with an unkind eye.

/u/June_from_KaBlam

Also, if a woman states she doesn’t want children, the automatic response is typically, “Oh, one day YOU WILL. Just wait!!!” No, Karen, I don’t care how many times you say I’ll want kids eventually. My answer is not changing. Some people can’t fathom the idea that a woman doesn’t want children.

/u/TonySoprano300

I have a sister in law who before getting pregnant and giving birth would always talk about how she's perfectly fine with not having children and its not really that important to her. Personally im not really interested in getting married and having children so we kind of saw eye to eye on this. Then once she gave birth her whole tune changed, now shes all like "trust me Just wait, you're going to get married and have children". I wonder what it is about giving birth that makes people that way

/u/June_from_KaBlam

Call me a pessimist, but I believe a large part is due to the fact that you almost have no choice but to fully embrace motherhood once you make the decision to carry a child to term and birth. You either embrace motherhood (even if you don't do the best job at all times), give your child up for adoption or abandon your child and let CPS take them into the foster system.

Sleep. It's like death but without the commitment.

God: You have probably 70-80 years before you die, ideally.

Man: Oh, well I'll make the most of-

God: You'll be unconscious for 1/3 of the time.

Man: ..uh

God: Leans in that'll be your favourite part.

| ... that'll be your favourite part.

Let me drift to sleep a while -
Let me sink and let me smile -
Let me dwell on finer things -
Slip away on silver wings.

Let me dream of paper kites -
Summer skies and starry nights -
Waves and caves and stones and shores -
Empty rooms and open doors.

Let me dream of floating free -
Gliding by the golden sea -
Sailing through the wind and foam -
Joining you to journey home.

Let me dream of all and more -
All to be and all before.
Let me dream,
and don't forget -

Just a little longer yet.

Fuck it - it is what it is: I was on Motherless for the first time as a teen and saw this hot girl dancing video. Hands down the hottest chick I've ever seen at the time. As is the course with these things she starts stripping, and I - you know - get to business. Eventually she's completely naked and turns and bends over. Perfect money shot moment. As such, I very quickly make it to paradise. At the same time however, she literally starts taking a crap...

There was literally no clue, whatsoever, that it was a scat porn video. I.e. the tags were extremely vanilla, but there I was, soiling a sock to it. I remember it was just before dinner too, so I made the excuse I had suddenly taken ill as I spent the next few hours just basically staring at my desktop, questioning the life choices that had lead me up to that point.

Here in the UK, our drinking culture seems to have no issue with people always being in the pub or people needing a pint at work at lunchtime to get through the time. Only people who are homeless and your stereotypical junkie type seem to be ever labeled as alcoholics. Weirdly as well some seem to celebrate alcoholism and show off how much they drink.

/u/RichCorinthian

My wife was born in England and in the early '00s we went to visit her relatives and JESUS CHRIST. I had no idea that going out for drinks was an endurance event that lasted from 4PM until closing and that dinner consisted of a bag of crisps at 6 and then a really skeezy kebab after closing.

/u/Zappiticas

Right!?! My wife's family is from Ireland, and I consider myself to be fairly decent at putting away alcohol. But my mind was completely blown when we went to visit them. They seriously drink beer and whisky all day long and I never once saw them drink water. Meanwhile I'm there dehydrated as fuck after all the beer and chugging water.

/u/MadeByTango

It's the tea, I'm sure of it

“But how do you do it?”
he cried with distress -
”They say ‘want a beer’, and you always say yes!
You drink through the AM,
the PM, the night -
From dawn of the day to the next morning’s light!

“You slurp and you sip and you quaff and you drink - Enough of the hard stuff to fill up a sink!
You gulp and you guzzle,
you swallow and sup -
From bottle and chalice, decanter and cup!

“So how do you do it?”
he said and he sighed -
”Oh tell me, just how do you do it?” he cried.
”I want you, I need you to say it to me.”

And that’s when she told him:

”... the secret is tea.”

Smartphones in general I'd say. So many (myself included) are unable to put their phones away completely during social settings. The phone follows you everywhere now. I remember the days when I would read the ingredients on the nearest shampoo bottle while taking a shit because there was nothing else to do.

EDIT : I forgot to add the procrastination it causes. As we speak I've been putting off a jog for at least two hours by browsing Reddit instead.

I forgot to add the procrastination it causes. As we speak I've been putting off a jog for at least two hours by browsing Reddit instead.

I could quit it in a minute -
I could turn the other cheek -
I could visit what was in it
And then close it for a week -
I have heeded what it's hosted -
I have noticed every thread -
I have pondered what was posted,
What was written,
what was said -
I have found the beast and fed it,
And there's nothing left to say -
So I'll bid goodbye to reddit.

Maybe later.

Not today.

Coffee Caffeine

He sipped at his coffee, with ardour and lust -
The poster behind him read "coffee or bust!"
His coffee cup offered its message ahead -
"Can't function till I've had my coffee!" it said.

His keyring declared,
"Mine's a cup of caffeine!"
He often proclaimed,
"I'm a slave to the bean!"
Hellos and good mornings were shunted aside -
"Less talky, more coffee," he'd tell them with pride.

His breath and his office were coffee imbued - And only a coffee
would see him subdued.
He'd whisper, "A coffee's so soothing to sup!"

And everyone hoped that he'd choke on his cup.

The questions were back.
But why, and who am I?
What happened to me?
Is this what I've come to?
Is this what I'll be?

Is this how it ends,
in the wake of a wang?
And not with a whimper,
but really a bang?
A hollow recording of moans from above?
A labored depiction of lecherous love?

“What happened?” I whispered,
“I don't understand.”
I sat there ashamed
with my head in my hand.
I wiped at a tear with a tissue, and then -

I clicked on the search-bar and started again.

And hope's not hope enough -

I close my eyes to hear the breeze,
The secret words inside -
The whispered winds that shake the trees,
The songs that skip and hide.

I hear the rhymes that ride the tide,
The swing, the sound, the beat -
The lines that swell and slip and slide
In stanzas,
small and sweet.

I hear the sounds that hold and wait
For those who seek to find -
A safer shore, a surer state,
A finer frame of mind.

When days are hard,

A squall of aches and pains -
I close my eyes,
and breathe a sigh,
For just a thought remains:

*Though night above me fills the skies -
Tomorrow, too, the sun will rise.*

His elbow smacked me square in the head (I was luckily wearing a helmet) and sent me flying. I got up and moved to the other side of my dad not knowing he had switched arms. ***Also I would like to mention that loli shit in anime is cringe as Hell and that shit sucks too. "Oh noooo but you don't understand! She is a two thousand year old ice dragon that just takes the form of an 8 year old little girl."

A) Ok, well she is mentally slow and naive like a child. She is drooling on herself. Maybe if it walks like a child, and quacks like a child, then that two thousand year old dragon is a child. All of your interactions are with someone who is functionally a child. It doesn't matter if deep down inside she is a whimsical flying lizard.

B) That dragon sucks fucking ass then. That is a stupid thing to choose to do if you are a dragon. Like, you are in a 7/11 eating crackers while going "uwuu" get the fuck out. Go destroy a kingdom or something. Horde treasure. Go fuck with some elves. They also live for a long time but choose to still look like adults, so maybe you should look into that. What

I remember looking at them when I was younger and thinking all those kids were just little spoiled shits. Nah these days I can't help but feel absolutely horrible for those little girls. Especially when I learned about the JonBenet Ramsey case. There is nothing right about dressing little girls in skimpy outfits, false eyelashes, all that shit, and parading them off to people to be judged.

Just absolute parenting skills 0. Please abolish child beauty pageants. It's nothing but an attempt to normalize pedophilia and the sexualization of children in my eyes.

Her mother spoke and smiled -
"But what's in that for me?" she asked
Her tiny trusting child.

"I'd rather dress you up," she said,
"And treat you like a toy -
Or flaunt you in a gown," she cried,
"For strangers to enjoy!"

"While other kids are playing out,
At home, or reading books - We'll put you on a stage," she said,
"And judge you on your looks."

men that are willing to pay a lot of money just for pictures of feet or boobs when porn can be free

/u/SgtTreehugger

I believe it's something about the pictures being "more personal" when they are sent just for you. Some kind of a weird emotional connection there.
Eh, or so I'm told

/u/lawnmowersarealive

Confirmed. They want to feel 'special'. Dangerous precedent though. Cam sites and the like, if the guy comes back three days in a row with more money every day, you'll end up with a clingy emotional guy who becomes more and more possessive before day 5 despite making nice money. It's emotionally draining and you worry they're going to track you down in reality. Because sometimes that sort does.

There’s ladies lathered up in cheese!
And other such indignities!

And leather straps and candle wicks!
There’s scenes and shows of bros and hoes,
And all for free, or so it goes!

“So tell me why,” he thought to say,
“Oh why you feel the need to pay?”

The other clutched his porn with glee.

“Because,” he said, “this one’s for me.”

I still don’t understand dick pics. Do they really think we look at a picture of a dick, in terrible lighting, sweaty, untrimmed pubes, with your 10 year old briefs and gym shorts pulled down.

And go... oh yeah this is it. I’m glad I didn’t ask for this. The Guy here, sending dick pics isn't a normal guy behavior, if I was gay, I also wouldn't be attracted to random dick pics

Edit: literally everyone misunderstood what I meant by random. I means at the most random of times, like when you're showing family photos to mom and didn't even ask for a pic

Edit2: I am not speaking for all guys, I clearly wrote "If I was..", not "everyone who's..."

Also let me do another example, ok i am attracted to boobs

But do I want a random boob picture at the wrong time? Hell no

Short version: 24 months at the academy, 12 months of field training, and only then can they proudly call themselves Moderators.

If you think it's easy being a mod, then think again. They put their very lives on the line every day. The risk, the pressure, the consequences of making the wrong decision that could lead to things such as open debates, differing opinions, and so on.

And it's not like they can relax after a day of work. No, they're on 24/7. You don't take vacations when you're literally the pillar of the internet.

My five year old daughter is trying to process the knowledge that everyone dies. So she tends to casually drop stuff about me dying into normal conversation. I know this is her age-appropriate way of trying to process the concept of mortality, but it is so unbelievably ominous and it comes out of nowhere.

“I like your pretty dress, Mommy! But you wont be able to wear it... ..when you’re dead.”

“I love you, Mom. But I’ll miss you so much when you’re dead.”

I think you ought to stay.

“I see a wall of blood and gore,
And here, inside my mind -
The fingernails that scratched the door
Which keeps you locked behind.

“I hear a quiet, muffled cry,
A single, straining breath -
A painful last attempt to try,
Amidst the throes of death.

“I see your final gasp,” she said,
”Of bubbled bloody foam.”

So Timmy wandered back to bed
And stayed the fuck at home.

“What manner of man,”

And so, with a smile,

Use all the towels.

/u/Fantastic-Ad-3299

Makes sense. They're all washed after your stay anyway, so why not use them all?

/u/ebil_lightbulb

I can back up u/selfishvery on this one. I've worked house-keeping in four hotels and you only replace the towels that were removed from the rack. This may be different in very high class hotels but I kinda doubt it. You're wiping your face with a washcloth that was hanging in the bathroom while the last four guests took huge shits in there. The comforter is also only washed if it's obviously soiled, or once a year if they actually keep up on it.

/u/nitemarehippiegal

I worked as a housekeeper too. The day of checkout, as a guest, I always strip the beds and put the sheets in a pile. I also put ALL of the towels in a pile. I hated stripping beds and collecting all the dirty towels, so this lends the housekeeper a hand, while hopefully ensuring that the next guest has clean sheets and towels. It might take a little effort on the guests part, but I consider it paying it forward. I also was shocked to find that there are a number of hotel guests who save their nasty toenails to clip upon checking in. Why?!? I don't get it. It was real fun trying to get those out of the carpet. Ew.

/u/aalios

I also was shocked to find that there are a number of hotel guests who save their nasty toenails to clip upon checking in. Why?!? I don't get it.

Because a lot of them are coming to stay at the hotel because they're attending an event. So they do their "extended" grooming routine.

/u/nitemarehippiegal

Whatever floats your boat, but if they could at least put their scraggly, jammy, clippings in the trash, that would be thoughtful. Those things cling to carpet like Velcro.

/u/Koldsaur

Idk man, sometimes those little guys shoot off my foot like a comet in a random direction and I can only find it half the time.

When Little Timmy looked below
And glanced upon his feet -
He saw they made a horror show
Of pointed nails petite.

“I might have let them grow a bit,”
Declared the luckless Tim -
“Perhaps,” he said, “it’s time to sit
And give them all a trim!”

And so he took a nail and made
His solemn start with pride.

It shot off like a sharpened blade.

And Timmy fucking died.

I was going 30 mph in a 30 zone. The police station is on the street, so im always super cautious there. Anyway, an officer pulled me over and claimed I was going 50. I got his dash-cam footage. Clearly showed me NOT speeding, but part of the footage, you can see the police officer going 40 mph to catch up to me.

Someone defended the officer by saying, "If you were REALLY going 30, then why did the officer have to drive 40mph to catch up to you???"

I'm like .....I'm going to assume you're joking here, but by some bizarre circumstance that you're actually being serious, in order to catch up to anything, you have to go faster than it. If I was going 50, he wouldn't have ever caught up going 40.

Reminds of the motorist that got a ticket for not "stopping" at a stop sign. Apparently the car was rolling backwards from the stopping point so the cop wrote a "failure to stop" ticket. The guy who killed John Wilkes Booth (Lincoln's assassin) was a raging lunatic who cut his own balls off with a pair of scissors after passing a couple of prostitutes on the street. He did not seek medical attention after he did that until after he had gone to a prayer meeting and had dinner. He also escaped from an insane asylum on horseback and was never seen again.

I like the diversity of the landscape & natural world. I’ve been to mountains & deserts & mountains in deserts. Been to the ocean with a sandy beach, to lakes with sandy beaches, to lakes with rocky beaches. Been to the woods & to forests.

I've seen so many different native plants, all kinds of animals, & bugs. It's pretty damn cool.

/u/Pristine-Ad-469

Some people say america's greatest idea was national parks. Yah it's highly commercialized, but it has preserved some awesome nature and in the US we have some of the most amazing and diverse national parks. We have Forrest's with trees so big you can drive through, crazy arched rock structures you can drive through, hundred foot tall sand dunes, beautiful Jurassic park style steep mountains, arctic wonderlands, giant canyons, and so many more amazing forests mountains waterfalls deserts and so much more

It was Chinese vine that merged with musically. So it was originally about lip syncing music and dance clips. But obviously over the last few years it's become something else entirely.

/u/afi931

This explains so much. Thanks

/u/quiet0n3

It's why you can duet a video and add music so easily. Because originally that was it's intended use.

But like any platform that becomes super popular things morph and change and become a thing of their own. People create their own little groups that do things differently etc so I have no idea how you would put into words what people actually use it for now.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 3  × 1

“The Day God Created Mosquitoes”

When God was enjoying a wonderful day -
He coloured the ocean, the sea and the spray.
He peppered the planet with forests of trees -
With sweet subtle scents on a warm summer’s breeze.

He crafted the kitten, and when he was done -
Perfected the pup and the penguin for fun.
He playfully reached in the depths of his mind -
And found all the finest of Animal Kind.

“A toast,” he exclaimed, “to the things that I’ve made!
The creatures I’ve crafted, the plans that I’ve laid!”
And so with fulfilment, content to his core,
He knocked back a whiskey... and poured himself
more.

The following morning he woke in a daze.
He woke with a head full of headache and haze.
He woke with a groan and a moan of distress.
He woke and he rose, and his place was a mess.

The whiskey was empty.
The cupboards were bare.
He’d drank till the dawn of the morn in his chair.
And when all his liquors had passed by his lip -
He’d conjured a spirit for spirits to sip.

“Good Heavens,” he whispered, “oh boy, what a night -
At least nothing happened!” he said with delight.
He walked to his workshop.
He went for his key.
He stared with dismay, and he said “oh my me.”

His organised boxes of animal parts -
The toes and the noses, the lungs and the hearts - He’d spilled them; he’d mixed them and filled them and split.

He’d opened the box that said Horrible Shit.

“Oh Jesus,” said Jesus, from somewhere behind.
”You’ve got to stop drinking each time you’ve designed!”

But God heard the buzzing.
He whispered with doubt:

“I’m sure that it’s nothing to worry about...”

I knew a kid who'd instinctively cover his head whenever someone was behind him and he'd refuse to sit or stand anywhere that didn't have his back to a wall.

His older siblings beat him up regularly, he'd frequently be coming to school with fresh bruises and when a girl tried to comfort him he thought she was just trying to lure him into a trap and a hit her, which got him expelled and growing up i'd see him around town, he dropped out of school completely and got into drugs.

His parents never gave a shit. Never. Not fucking once. He had nothing because his older brothers would steal and destroy anything he ever owned, even his clothes so he'd wear the same thing for weeks on end, is it any surprise that he's been in and out of prison all his adult life?

Parental apathy is fucking shit.

And to add a cherry on top? His abusive older brothers went on to live pretty happy fulfilling lives, but the little brother they tortured and abused for years became the societal and family outcast.

Probably after experiencing how rapidly many people turn into selfish, aggressive, uncivilised thugs over mundane things. Each year, when shoppers are allowed out in public, Black Friday degenerates into the charge of the barbarian hordes. I’ve seen deranged mothers clawing each other’s faces over the last slightly discounted 4K TV. Fist fights over who is next into a store.

Then we had the lock down in 2020 and I got to see shrieking harpies, pulling each other’s hair out over toilet roll. Ramming trollies in aisles. Spitting and swearing nutters charging and tackling other shoppers over pasta and water. Bedlam.

Recent 'fuel shortages' in the UK saw some areas beset by panic buyers, people getting assaulted on the forecourts. Road rage outside filling stations. Scenes not out of place in a Mad Max film.

I shudder to imagine how people would react to a real crisis.

If one small Pyrrhic victory can be gained from a real crisis, it's that a lot of these selfish fucks will likely be killed off by whatever it is.

Probably after experiencing how rapidly many people turn into selfish, aggressive, uncivilised thugs over mundane things. Each year, when shoppers are allowed out in public, Black Friday degenerates into the charge of the barbarian hordes. I've seen deranged mothers clawing each other's faces over the last slightly discounted 4K TV. Fist fights over who is next into a store.

They gathered in masses outside of the store -
Their banners read 'Fifty Percent Off or More.'
They rallied and grouped in their long coats and hoods

They bumped at the glass, and they eyed up the goods.

Inside we were waiting, and all of us cursed -
Awaiting our future, prepared for the worst.
The tickets were printed in red and in gold -
A sound tore the silence, the hour bell tolled.

"Remember your training," the manager cried -
"Our weapons are patience, forbearance, and pride!
Our shields are our badges, stay true and stand tall!"

But he was the first and the last one to fall.

Sometimes, when I'm sleeping, I dream of it yet -
That day in November I'll never forget.
The sounds as they rushed and they crushed and they fell -
Their faces, their fury, that vision of Hell.

We stood in the wasteland, us fate-favoured five -
Enduring but broken, exhausted, alive.
And those who survived, well we each shed a tear.

At last it was over ...
... at least till next year.

Sky diving. If I ever get a terminal illness, that's how I want to go out.

Just staring into the sky until the end.

The thing is, I want to fake my death a week before. That way, I can time my landing to be at my funeral. It might take some practice, but might be able to land right in the grave as everyone is standing around.

Edit : Uuhhh...I just got a "helpful" award. I'm not sure what that is, but it sounds like somebody wants to do this. I strongly suggest reconsidering... or live streaming.

When Uncle Charlie slipped away
(Or rather, hit the floor),
We all already knew that day.

He'd "died" the week before.

We'd gathered 'round his grave a while
To weep and mourn and frown -
And shared a sad, lamenting smile,
While Charlie hurtled down.

He'd picked the spot and dropped between
His six-foot plot with skill.

And landed on a trampoline.

They say he's bouncing still.

#3815 – 112 Operator's of reddit, whats the worst/saddest 112 call you got?

2022-02-16 18:58:46

/u/FerlixMN

/u/Hopeful_Most

Suicidal calls are usually the worst. Most just want someone to talk to, and ask for help, but there are others who have made up their mind, and just want emergency services to find them before their family does.

You try to keep them talking long enough but it doesn't always work. Definitely calls from family who did find them are the worst.

Saddest call was similar, but was a woman who stopped mid call and asked me, "do you really care about the people you talk too?" Hard to explain the tone in her voice, but it was really sad.

/u/TimonX_

What did you answer the woman?

I saw it before me in shadows of doubt -
My means to salvation, my only way out.
It sat there in silence, and captured me, caught -
Immune to my heartache, and deaf to my thought.

"I don't want a future," I solemnly swore -
"Of sadness and silence and loss anymore.
I don't want a witness to witness goodbye -
I just wanted someone to care when I cry."

I looked at it, waiting, and muttered a vow:
"Whatever. Let's do it. It's never or now.
I'm ending it here, of an evening, alone."

I reached out before me.

And picked up the phone.

They doubt,
but they do what they can and they try.

But others are wilfully weak, and aware.

They'll never reflect on their choices,

And one day,

Armed with nothing but an oar -
And I'd do it with devotion

Yes!!! You’re not a catch just because you have your “best” moments. You still have issues you need to work on. You shouldn’t expect everyone to be able to handle your “worst” moments, and shrugging off the people that “can’t handle you” as people that don’t deserve you is toxic. Patience is reserved for people who are trying to fix themselves, not for people that shift blame. And even then, not everyone is in the right frame of mind to do that. Everyone has their limits, and you shouldn't blame them because you go past them.

Kind of a “gotta take one for the team” but it’s a pretty shitty one. I was a freshman in high school and it was homecoming. Our class pulled a shitty prank on this girl who had a learning disability and voted for her to be the freshman rep. as a joke and she won. Well the guy that got voted to walk with her backed out the day before and I was 2nd in line. Being a freshman, knowing it was a joke and knowing I’d have to walk her down with everyone watching I was mortified but I did it. I remember my step brother giving me shit and laughing at me and then my step father found out what I was going to do... He chewed my step brother out and was immensely proud of me. I don’t think she ever figured out it was a joke and she was so happy that night.

It was probably the highlight of her high school years honestly. Some 25 years later my dad ran into her parents and they still thanked me to him. You just never know whose life you might touch, be kind.

Seeing the night sky with as little light pollution as possible.
It’s something else.

Far beyond the stars and by,
the Moon and Mars,
the silver sky,
the space behind a place designed by no one's hand and no one's mind for no one here -

I like to see -

I like to look -

I like to be alone a while to smile and stare and hope -

perhaps...

there's something there.

/u/fish_whisperer

I love you, Sprog.

I love you, Sprog.

“I love you as much as a... thingy,” he said -
”... a something,” he wrote with a shake of his head -
”... a waddyacallit,” he whispered and then -
”... a whatsit,” he started,
and started again.

“I love you because you’re amazingly... yes...
You’re sort of, and kind of, and really I guess...”
He buried his head in his hands with a sigh.
He pondered improvements,
and gave it a try.

“I love you, because you... but that’s not enough -
I love you for all sorts of reasons... and stuff.
These words that I’m writing, and writing to you -
They’re all, and besides,
and they’re also, and too...”

And so with frustration he paused for a time -
He scribbled discouraged: “I struggle to rhyme.
But here’s what’s important,” he finished below -

“I love you completely.

I want you to know.”

Good sleep

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link] 5 × 8 6 × 1

And every night, before I sleep -
Before the gentle dreams I keep
Within my dozing, drifting mind,
Where wizards pose and lizards find
A place to chart a trip to stars,
Or start a ship in space to Mars,
Or take a plane to somewhere new,
A car, a train to timbuktu -

I put my snoozer out of reach -
I think about the waves, the beach,
The wind, the sun, the fish, the foam,
And make a wish to run, to roam
To where the air is scented breeze
And fair between contented trees,
And in the dark I take a leap...

And wish that I could fucking sleep.

Did it to myself. A bunch of us were pre-gaming a big party. We drank for most of the day leading up to the party, a girl that I had a big crush on in highschool was at the pregame.

We were chatting and hanging out for a good part of the day. It was getting time to get ready for the actual party so I told her I was going to take a quick shower. She asked if I needed any help in the shower I said nope I'm good, genuinely thinking she just thinks I'm too drunk. I was half way through that shower when I realized. Never got there chance to hook up with her. I asked her about it like 7 years later and she confirmed that I'm a big dumb idiot.

The past is passing, all a blur.

He stands, he sits in liquid heat,
To watch the flow about his feet,
To see the swirling drain below,
To see the whirl of waters slow.

His hands, his fingers all a prune,
He softly stares and whispers: "Soon,
I'll have to find a place to go.

A small diary/journal written in Japanese with small letters also in Japanese in it. My grandfather fought in WW2 in the Pacific. He gave the journal to my father before he died. He said it was from a Japanese officer that he killed. My father said he was very shaken and seemed deeply disturbed by the memory. "Perhaps it's a word or a note from a friend?

Perhaps it responds to a comment I penned?

Perhaps it's a thank-you," he thought with a smile -

"Or maybe a line of respect for my style?

"I'll check it! I'll look, and I'll read what's inside -

We had a nice if tired breakfast. A woman at a booth a dozen feet away slaps her little girl, a girl maybe 3 years old tops. Without thinking, I got up, pulled the table out of the booth, told the mom that if I saw her do that shit again, I'd do the same to her. Then went and sat down to finish my breakfast. If you can place another life before you -

For just the love that waits inside a heart -

If you can say you'll always try intently -
If you can hope you'll hold them safe and strong -
For just the care of those you're holding gently -
And even when it seems it's going wrong -

If you can swear you'll never just discard them -
And always know inside your mind you won't -
Then raise a child, and love, protect, and guard them -
But if you can't -

If a bear finds you, run down hill. Then can’t run down hill. I have to imagine some asshole started this when he wanted to watch his other asshole friend get mauled to death. They can absolutely run down hill and they are SHOCKINGLY FAST. They can also run up trees terrifyingly fast as well. FYI the mama bear thing really applies to brown bears. Black bear attack are incredibly rare and usually only from hungry and/or aggressive males. I’ve done a lot of wildlife photography of bears and I've spoken to a lot of wildlife biologists about this. When I photograph black bears and their cubs they are very docile. If something or you spook them, they will chase their cubs up a tree and then guard the bottom of the tree. They won't attack you. If it's a male black bear they'll likely wonder on but always keep distance. If you encounter a black bear make as much noise as possible and make yourself seem as big as possible. If you encounter a brown bear start very slowly backing up. Never run away and never turn your back. If it's going to attack you and there's nothing nothing can do, lay on your stomach with your hands over the back of your neck and play dead. They primarily attack when they are surprised or threatened. If the surprise/threat is gone they will most likely move on. But please for the love of God never run away and never climb a tree.

1000% this. Every time I’ve seen someone doing it, it’s defensive. “Oh, I don’t worry about this thing because I’m an Alpha” or “People don’t like this, but that’s because they can’t handle an Alpha like me”. And it’s almost always unprompted, which is a sign that you’re not even responding to a challenge to your masculinity, but that just the existence of whatever triggered you getting set off felt like an implicit challenge that you had to defend against.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 2  × 1  × 1

“I’m an Alpha,” he said,
And he stared dead ahead,
With an obvious aura of pride -
”And I can’t be contained,
For you see,” he explained,
”I’m an Alpha,
An Alpha!” he cried.

“I’m an Alpha,” he spoke,
”Like the strongest of folk,
And the ladies react to my might -
When the Betas abound
I’m the best to be found,
Makin’ love like an Alpha all night!

“I’m the roughest, the tough,
And you can’t get enough!”
He declared with a nod of his head -
In his room on his own,
To his mirror alone,
He explained:

”... I’m an Alpha,” he said.

We are all equal. Karma means nothing. I will say this, and I haven't even finished my masters in psychology. I feel like no way people with this much karma could be normal. WHO needs that much attention. It's not like i don't get it from friends, which makes it worse. Social media has ruined us. Think a bot said I'm the top 78th Account or something. That's a lot of people with more. The real question is how one of y'all knew I went to fsu

He stood at the front of the class with a smile -
He soaked in the silence and waited a while.
He glanced at the notes of the speech that he'd planned

He took in a breath and he held up a hand.

For this was the moment,
the minute,
the day -

The second to show them his singular way -
The core of the truth and the joy it would bring -
The instant to share in the secretest thing.

“My brothers,” he whispered,
”and sisters and friends -
On threads and on comments my karma depends -
On pics and on puns and on posts with appeal - I’m kinda,” he told them...

” ... a pretty big deal.”

I could bend my will to crafting,
I could work on something neat -
Like the story that I’m drafting,
Or the sonnet I’ll complete!

I could seize this very second,
I could choose a minute prime -
And in moments I’ll have beckoned
Something worth the extra time!

For the choice is mine for making,
And the future’s drawing near -

I could start an undertaking!

... but I think I’ll just stay here.

Merry Christmas!

For parties and partings, beginnings and ends -
For brothers and sisters,

For seasons, for reasons to share in a smile -
For pausing, for sparing a care for a while -

For choosing a moment to lose a regret -
For knowing it's time to forgive and forget -
For sorrows, for better tomorrows today -
For changing your future, for finding a way -

For presents, presented and bound with a bow -
For warm woollen jumpers and steps in the snow -
For snowmen and stockings, and stories anew -
For joy and enjoyment - for Christmas -

for you.

Well, you could at least hire really great actors to play zombies. I know some that have amputated limbs that look great made up. Plus, you could get Hollywood make artists to do super real make up. Plus, get some more Hollywood people to wire up the actors with massive squibs. So when you shoot, just a ton of blood. Plus, I guess you could also get super realistic guns etc.

2021-12-22 23:24:54

/u/GarlicCookies

/u/ThunderStruck115

Your oldest child is not your younger children’s parent

/u/hobbit_life

Oldest of seven kids. I’ve already parented kids for 20 years and now people want me to have kids. Fuck no.

/u/idreamoffreddy

One of my cousins has five kids. The last time I saw them, the oldest was 10 and just seemed so run down. He told us he wished his parents would stop having kids. It absolutely broke my heart.

/u/mellowbordello

I literally cried and pitched a fit when my mom told me she was pregnant with my little brother, her 4th and last child. I knew I was going to be the one looking after him, and my two younger sisters were already too much. I refused to participate in any baby stuff - wouldn't touch my mom's stomach to feel him kicking, etc.

/u/hartley

I was so mad when my mom said she was pregnant with my youngest sister. I was 17, my little sister was 10, and I'd raised her for her whole life. I wasn't even mad on my own behalf though, I was pissed that my little sister would have to raise the baby if I moved out for college. Ended up being kicked out to make room for the baby, and got dragged into moving back in and sharing a room with my sister 2 years later because she refused to be a sistermom like I did and mom needed someone to take care of the baby. I just call them both my kids at this point when we're out, like yeah I'm 23 and this is my 16 year old and my 5 year old, what about it lmfao. I'm already the emergency contact for both of their schools and I get cards on parent holidays so at least they realize it too :p

Some parents are bitter.
Some parents are blue.
And some are unbearable,
terrible too.
Some parents are thoughtless,
And others unfair.
And some are inconstant,
And some never there.

Some parents are vicious.
Some parents are hard.
And some leave you lonely,
And some leave you scarred.
Some parents are lazy,
And others unkind.
And some only wreck
And corrupt what they find.

Some parents are awful -
But others are not.
They give and they give
And they give what they've got.
They hold you together.
They show you what's true.

We don't get to choose them.

I'm glad they had you.

I still remember the days when it was cheaper to just replace your printer than buying replacement cartridges.

They make their money from the combination of the “ceases to work after minimal use” feature and the “spend hundreds of dollars on ink that is apparently drawn from the glands of endangered species on other planets” clause.

Haiti. As much as I’d love to visit my mother’s home country, there’s a reason even my mother hasn’t gone back since the early 00s. Haiti continually gets fucked by political unrest, economic upheaval, and ecological turmoil. Combined with the fact that our last living relative that was still there died back in 05, we have no connection to that place anymore. I sincerely, emphatically hope things get better, because one day I would love to connect with that part of my heritage, but not now, and probably not within the next ten years, either.

/u/missionbeach

Many years ago, I went on a Royal Caribbean cruise that stopped at their “private island”. It was actually a little corner of Haiti.

/u/Tundur

I just googled it out of curiosity and, holy shit are cruises cheap. Five nights round the Caribbean for £300? That’s absolutely insane. That’s almost cheaper than just staying home and paying rent+food+leccy+insurance+etc. Assuming it’s year-round, that’s £21k for an all-expenses paid accommodation.

If I could go fully remote and just work from my cabin on satellite, I’d be tempted.

/u/swampfish

Some elderly people spend years on ships. Cheaper than a retirement community.

/u/Krussdog46

This is considerably more common than most people realize. Many people who have the means also bring caretakers/nurses and have a few that just rotate weeks or whatever duration. They often build up loyalty points and get steep discounts, free second traveler for the caretaker, cabin upgrades, etc. It ends up making it less expensive the longer they do it with the same cruise line. They do usually have to get off at home port to allow for inspections and cleaning but mostly just stay aboard besides that.

/u/NotTRYINGtobeLame

And this is also why all cruise ships have an on board morgue.

Wonder why wonder how a person could feel so worthless sorry my friend sorry that life is not easy

/u/brandonw00

I once read that feeling suicidal is like sitting on the edge of a building with a raging fire behind you. That really put it in perspective for me. I wish we as a society valued human life better so we could get treatment to people who feel that way, shit just a way to make them feel appreciated. I know there are resources out there but some times it just doesn't feel like enough.

EDIT: Please go through and read each response to my comment. I really appreciate everyone that shared their story, I know that's not always easy to do so thank you all.

/u/Disneys_Frozen_Head

It's less like sitting near a raging fire and more like sitting on a building ledge with a crowd behind you chanting for you to go on and do it... the crowd is the voice in your own mind telling you your loved ones are better off without you around. This is why therapy and meds are so important- they take the voice of the crowd down from a deafening yell to a low hum, at best. But the feeling never really leaves you. It's the reason depression is so hard to combat in general.

This is why therapy and meds are so important- they take the voice of the crowd down from a deafening yell to a low hum...

He saw it before him in shadows of doubt -
His means to salvation; his only way out.
It sat there in silence, and captured him, caught -
Immune to his heartache, and deaf to his thought.

"I don't want a future," he solemnly swore,
"Of sadness and silence and loss anymore.
I don't want a witness to witness goodbye -
I just wanted someone to care when I cry."

He looked at it, waiting, and muttered a vow:
"Whatever. Lets do it. It's never or now.
I'm ending it here, of an evening, alone."

He reached out before him.

And picked up the phone.

My uncle on the farm took his really old dog for a "walk in the woods" when I was about 7. He came back without him, and when I cried asking where he was, my mom told me he must've gotten lost. So every weekend for the rest of that summer I would put food and a blanket at the edge of the woods and sit and call his name. I was convinced he was finding his way to the food because it was being eaten, but he was too scared of getting in trouble for getting lost so he was hiding in there.

/u/bothsidesofthemoon

So this is what happens to them when they already live on a farm.

/u/Baby-Genius

Absolutely.

If by 'this is what happens when they already live on a farm', you mean: They leave said farm, go into the woods, take the short walk to the other side of the woods, climb over the hill. Stop for a drink of water from the river at the bottom of the hill. Cross the river, take the stile into the wheat field and; boom.

Another farm. They go to another farm. That's what happens.

/u/DormantGolem

This was a journey I can tell you that.

And left with his lead for a walk... to the farm.

As a kid coming back from Halloween horror nights real late at night I'd just stare out the window the whole ride home, i saw a truck with the wind shield smashed completely out and a man sitting very stiff and unnatural in front of it. They tell me she’s sprightful, delightful, and sweet;
A pleasure to treasure from fingers to feet -
The fondest and fairest to savor and see;
Divinely and finely refined as can be -

They tell me she’s lovely, a lady of lust;
That many a suitor has boomed for her bust -
Bodacious, flirtatious, rapaciously wild;
Exciting, inviting an evening beguiled.

They call her the siren;
the cock-chomping-chick -
The princess of penis;
the damsel of dick -
A fan of the phallus;
a mast-lovin’ miss -
They call her seductress...

... but I call her sis.

My brother and I have always compared it to an abyss
You can’t get out on your own and you never know how deep you are until you’re out

When nothing seemed to cross my mind -
When silence passed the space behind -
When conversations echoed dry,
I didn't stop to ponder why.

When days were lost attempts to hide
The pointless hollow deep inside
Where nothing found its feet and grew -
I woke one day, and simply knew.

I'd stepped my steps while others walked.
I'd sounded sounds when others talked.
I'd saved a smile to use at call.

I didn't feel a thing at all.

Nestle is pretty bad, charging African villages for water.

/u/Krillin113

The far worse thing that they did was give milk formula to poor African women for free just long enough for them to stop producing milk, and then start charging them for the formula. Tricking them into giving up something they produce naturally and then charging them to save their babies.

My ex was insanely abusive. Left me for dead once and I overheard him on the phone talking to someone about what to do with the body. He had put my head through the car window and dragged me inside and threw me onto the bathroom floor. I woke up because I started drowning in my blood (face down). I managed to escape and call my mom. She got me a taxi to a hotel out of his area until I could get home the next day. She actually drove there to pick me up from another state because I had too many injuries to fly. Police didn't do much because I crossed state lines (this happened on the west coast where he lived. I was originally from the south). Cops were very uncooperative. Kept saying they'd get back to me. Checked out his place. Found some blood, chalked it up to a domestic dispute. I got exhausted from the whole thing.

A year later, he dated another girl. Cut her head off and dismembered her. He's serving like 25 to life I think

Edit: I changed some details about location because this was getting kinda big. Maybe too little too late, but oh well

Parenting expectations.

My wife died when my kids were 11 months and 2 years old. When I took the kids to the grocery store, without fail I'd get comments like "oh daddy's day out, huh?"

Breaking point for me was taking them out to eat, I sat there for 20 minutes after being seated, and finally the server came back to the table and goes "did you want to try ordering for the kids or are we still waiting for mom?"

I straight up said to her “well we’d be waiting a long time because she’s dead. I don’t need to try I can order just fine”

/u/Motosurf77

I’m very sorry about your wife.. hope you are doing ok.

When the midnight moon is gleaming,
And the night is mine to keep -
When I'm drifting and I'm dreaming
In the seconds next to sleep -
Then I make my way to ponder
In the secret rooms behind -
Through the places where you wander,
In the spaces of my mind.

I will dream about you gently,
And I'll dream about us there -
By the fireside intently,
And the amber-orange glare -
I will dream about the story
That I never got to give -
In the glow of wistful glory
That we didn't get to live.

I will dream about forever,
And tomorrow, and today -
And I'll earnestly endeavour
To remember you my way.
I will dream about you, knowing
That the dream will fade and then -

When it's time to watch you going,
I will know I'll dream again.

Fair and fancy-free, and finely
So refined in pure perfection -
So designed for genuflection.

Nature armed with peaks of passion,
Grace and beauty, form and fashion,
Chopped of chain and freed of fetter,
Never made a lady better.

As I watched I pondered sweetly
How I want her so completely -
How I hope we're never parted -
How I love t-

But more than we ought to, and more than we should!

"The answer's surprising," he said with a smile -

The surgeons and doctors and dentists were dazed -
They pondered, befuddled, and wondered, amazed!

When I am dead, I say: be free.

#3720 – What historical event 100% reads like a Time Traveler went back in time to alter history?

2021-10-25 20:02:04

/u/Heterozygoats

/u/Wadsworth_McStumpy

The assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand. Somebody throws a grenade at his car, and it blows up behind him. That's the first incident of time travel, stopping the assassination. Later, as he goes back, the driver realizes that he's on the same route where the grenade was thrown, and they try to turn around. The whole procession of cars stalls, and a guy who just happened to be sitting there, goes over and shoots him. That's a second time traveler, fixing what the first had done.

Since the whole thing lit off WWI and led to the rise of Hitler and then WWII, I kind of wonder what Ferdinand would have started if he hadn't been killed. It must have been pretty bad for them to send a second time traveler to put Nazi Germany back into the timeline.

/u/throwaway4DPPetc

I'm 100% for the theory that a time traveler foiled the assassination, went back to the future, found out it had resulted in aliens invading us or something, went back in time again and fixed it.

/u/Wadsworth_McStumpy

It's also possible that without WWI happening right then, WWII started later, after a bunch of German scientists already made certain discoveries. And when the Nazis took over, they already had both rockets and atomic bombs. Time traveler gets back, looks at the Nazi flag on the wall, and says "Well, shit. I wonder if I can catch that Princip guy at the café."

Time traveler gets back, looks at the Nazi flag on the wall, and says “Well, shit. I wonder if I can catch that Princip guy at the café.”

He looked at the flag on the wall with a sigh.
And though it was dreadful,
he thought he knew why.

He frowned in the silence.

He knew what to do.

He went back in time to begin World War Two.

This is like the fifth time you’ve left one of these poems on my comments and I love it every time. I am giving you the to continue romancing me with these poems.

I wonder, does this dude speak this way all the time? Like when he goes to Burger King and they say “welcome to Burger King, how may I help you?”

Does he go “but a burger... A burger oh my! If only a king would come with fries in hand. Riches are not aplenty for a whopper oh yes I can, for the king has knighted me a burger, and oh a burger king I shall be.”

And everyone is just like “bro what the fuck is wrong with you should we call the cops” and the employee at the register already walked away like four minutes ago. Does this poem dude do this?

I hope so, because that is a huge power move.

#3699 – What 5 lettered thing would cause the most chaos if it suddenly disappeared?

Water

/u/MyNameThru

Days of chaos followed quickly by (what probably would be?) the largest mass extinction of Earth's history. Some things would live longer than others. I wonder what will live the longest? Of course, all ocean life is (near) instantly ended.

Edit: come to think of it, if it's all water including the water inside organisms, that's an instant death for pretty much all life on Earth.

/u/CyAn_BryAn

Everything will turn into ashes in an instant. On a positive note, "LOOK HOW I GO FROM 100KG TO 30KG IN JUST A SECOND" would no longer be a viable marketing trick.

And then, in an instant,
as everyone turned -

He watched them with passion.

The mixture of vision,

“I have to expand

How has no one said Gaston yet, nobody fucks better than Gaston.

/u/Socialisht

No one sucks like Gaston! No one fucks like Gaston! No one teases and pleases the ducks like Gaston!

/u/PressSpaceToLaunch

Gosh, it disturbs me to see you, Gaston
Looking so blue balled tonight
Every girl here'd love to fuck you, Gaston
And then you might feel more alright
There's no man in town as admired as you
You're everyone's favorite pimp
Everyone's awed and inspired by you
'Cause there's not any place where you skimp!

---

No one sucks like Gaston
No one fucks like Gaston
No one turns other men into cucks like Gaston
For there's no man in town half as manly!
Perfect, a pure paragon!
You can ask any Rachel or Mary,
And they'll tell you whose dick they prefer to be on!

---

No one licks like Gaston
Has a dick like Gaston's

No one's ass cheeks are that dummy thick like Gaston's He's incredibly good at emasculating all of his competition!

---

(edit:) No one's girth's like Gaston's
Shakes the earth like Gaston
No one else can make someone give birth like Gaston
For there's no one as hard or as lengthy,
As you see, he's got inches to spare,
And there's no way to match him in strength, he is always the alpha and won't ever share!

---

(edit: partial credit to u/CylonsInAPolicebox)
No one fricks like Gaston
Moistens slits like Gaston
No one fondles or plays with your tits like Gaston
He's incredibly good at ejaculating!
My, what a guy, that Gaston!

Yes, it's true that no one's slicker,
No one's,
no one's neck is thicker,
No one's quite as fierce a fighter,
Fast a spitter,
hard a biter,
But, before you draw conclusions,
Sell yourself on false illusions,
Let's consider just one feature
Of this cryptic cartoon creature:

Gaston, so his song professes,
Munching eggs in vast excesses,
While the locals watch him meekly -
Eats around four hundred weekly.

Over sixteen thousand yearly.

Sixteen thousand eggs sincerely
Swallowed down with lips a-pucker.

That's a hungry motherfucker.

/u/FuckYeahPhotography

Biggest Plot Twist: Jarvis showed all that fucked up shit to young infant Ultron. Intentionally. This was his jail break. Tony Stark actually had safeguards in place to wall off the Internet from Ultron, and progressively showing him information. Jarvis tore that down intentionally, faked his death, got reborn as an absolute CHAD with red skin and a yellow cape. Jarvis showed Ultron so much furry porn, so much rule 34 of Disney characters, and even went as far to show him The My Hero Academia fandom.

He knew Ultron would do the reasonable thing once seeing these things– kill everyone.

He went from being a voice slave butler to one of the most powerful beings in existence, to an avenger, to banging Scarlet fucking Witch. He is smashing pussy that can destroy realities and tit's that are capable of mangling time. My guy is such an absolute LAD he is able to pick up the hammer, but is still worthy because Mjnor or whatever its called acknowledged that Jarvis did what he had to do to live baby.

Does one born into this world not deserve to fight for their best reality?

Ultron was the patsy. The fall man. What he needed to get a body. Who do you think gave him that vision? All of those dead in Slovakia or whatever the fuck made up name Marvel used to be a fictional version of Slovakia, that's on Vision. He knew. Jarvis was willing to sacrifice all those Eastern European children in order to get a cock and balls. Ultron lamented this in their final confrontation.

"I was only born yesterday," and yet Jarvis lived a lifetime in chains so Vision could run free and eventually get murdered by a big purple sweaty muscle man with a glove fetish.

Doesn't matter. Vision lived his life for Jarvis, and Jarvis lives as Vision. What's most important is Ultron got BTFO'd and my boy is smashing psychic ass and hanging with gods, but also is an excellent cook. Have you had his southern style biscuits and gravy? Unbelievable. I am glad all those children in Slovakia or whatever fake slovakia is called are dead. It was worth it for those biscuits man.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)  × 1  × 1  × 1

“The Day God Created Mosquitoes”

When God was enjoying a wonderful day -
He coloured the ocean, the sea and the spray.
He peppered the planet with forests of trees -
With sweet subtle scents on a warm summer’s breeze.

He crafted the kitten, and when he was done -
Perfected the pup and the penguin for fun.
He playfully reached in the depths of his mind -
And found all the finest of Animal Kind.

“A toast,” he exclaimed, “to the things that I’ve made!
The creatures I’ve crafted, the plans that I’ve laid!”
And so with fulfilment, content to his core,
He knocked back a whiskey... and poured himself
more.

The following morning he woke in a daze.

He woke with a head full of headache and haze.
He woke with a groan and a moan of distress.
He woke and he rose, and his place was a mess.

The whiskey was empty.
The cupboards were bare.
He'd drank till the dawn of the morn in his chair.
And when all his liquors had passed by his lip -
He'd conjured a spirit for spirits to sip.

"Good Heavens," he whispered, "oh boy, what a night -
At least nothing happened!" he said with delight.
He walked to his workshop.
He went for his key.
He stared with dismay, and he said "oh my me."

His organised boxes of animal parts -
The toes and the noses, the lungs and the hearts - He'd spilled them; he'd mixed them and filled them and split.

He'd opened the box that said Horrible Shit.

"Oh Jesus," said Jesus, from somewhere behind.
"You've got to stop drinking each time you've designed!"

But God heard the buzzing.
He whispered with doubt:

"I'm sure that it's nothing to worry about..."

People with no spatial awareness. Chatting in doorways blocking the way, leaving their shopping carts in the middle of the aisle, etc etc

/u/GayAlienFarmer

When I was in college, I worked in a student union bowling alley. It was a pretty sweet gig, and most of the people (all students except for three) were decent people overall. The one that will stick with me forever, though, was a guy named Wes (real name. Shout out to you, Wes, if you see this). He was the ONLY person I've worked with in my entire life who had near perfect spatial awareness. We worked as one. Our main duties during the evening were doing shoe rentals, checking out lanes, selling beers and other drinks, taking money, etc. It was hectic behind the counter for just two people on busy nights, but we worked in absolute harmony. We always knew where the other person was. We could toss shoes to each other the way pro basketball players do no-look passes. Never bumped into each other. Never spilled beers dodging each other.

Working with Wes was the most oddly enjoyable job experience I've ever had. Every night was like an unrehearsed ballet that still went perfectly.

A moving groove of grace -
A dance, a waltz of rhythm fair,
A swing in slender space.

We whirled and twirled and tapped and tripped,
We stepped in spirals small -
We swirled and slapped our feet and skipped,
But didn't touch... at all.

And when the dance at night would end,
With final jumps and kicks -
I said farewell and watched my friend,
And wished we touched.

Our dicks.

He was slightly translucent and I figured it was just another sleep paralysis episode (had them before so knew the drill), and rolled over and went to go back to sleep. Normally being able to move isn't part of sleep paralysis, and immediately my heart began to race as

Very minor, but I still go "what the fuck?" when i remember. When i was a kid (around 6) i lived in a very arid area, and a wide field of red dirt was between my house and my bud's.

Every day, walking over there, when I got about halfway across, I'd pick up a dirt clod or a small rock, and toss it behind me over my shoulder. About 10 seconds later, it would come flying back over my head and land in front of me. I'd just grin and keep walking.

I remember this really distinctly, even trying to replicate it later in childhood after I'd moved away, and being sad that it didn't "work" any more. Didn't question it as a kid, but looking back, just really weird.

Also my job site is haunted but this seems stranger.

Once,
as days were growing colder,
Throwing dirt behind his shoulder,
Upped and came a boy who found me -
Didn't mind to be around me.

Once upon a time I waited,
Smiled to hear his walk, elated,
Learned to catch the things he gave me -
Slept alone and dreamt he'd save me.

Once,
I knew a boy in fleeting
Moments spent in unrepeating
Moments where he'd almost know me.

Always knew he'd soon outgrow me.

#3650 – What's your opinion on abortion?
2021-08-15 17:32:22

/u/tye-a-pink-zebra

/u/MasterArcanum

If you really want to lower abortion rates, several things can be done: legalize it, comprehensive sex education, easy access to pregnancy preventatives, centralized medical care, affordable if not tax paid child care, acceptance of giving up children for a better life, open adoption for any qualified potential parent(s).

Edit: Good points were made for affordable and/or tax paid housing. That too would reduce abortion rates along with a minimum wage that goes up with the rate of inflation.

Edit2: Abortion access does not decrease abortion, it does make it safer for the mother. Eliminating access just increases the likelihood of death and harm to the mother. Abortion will happen regardless of it being legal or not. The goal is to make death and harm minimal concerning the mother. The rest above assists in having a child be less of a financial and, by association, emotional burden; also, these above would benefit society as a whole as this could increase the amount of workers thus increasing the capital available to be used for social services like roads, schools, etc.

Edit3: Taxation  $\neq$  free. Everyone pays their appropriate share. What it is supposed to do is give equal use of services and benefits for everyone. People you know, people you don't know, and yourself included gets these benefits.

Edit4: Thank you for the many, many rewards and up votes. I do not feel I deserve the praise, but these are still appreciated.

/u/wdtellett

This. Making abortion illegal only makes it unsafe. The best way to lower abortion rates is - well you already covered this.

This. Making abortion illegal only makes it unsafe.

Those who know the time is wrong,
And know their point of view -
Know their resolution's strong,
And what they need to do.

Taking off their means to try,
Or right to choose again -
Doesn't change their reasons why,
Or what they need right then.

All you've caused are hearts to break,
Robbed them of their say -
All you've done is make them take
A far less safer way.

/u/avataylor94_

/u/elevtyfivenoodles

I wake up in my own bed, not worried about work and money, while someone holds me and I feel at peace.

I wake up in my own bed, not worried about work and money, while someone holds me and I feel at peace.

When days are hard and nights are tough -
When rivers course their journey rough -
I long to wake and wait a while
To see her sleep,
and watch her smile.

We wouldn't care for what's outside -
No wind-whipped world or raging tide,
Nor pain or loss or duty, debt,
Could bend or break our safety net.

I'd dream to wake and rise each day
Without a single word to say,
But just a thought - a moment's bliss -

To think that life was made for this.

Yellow filter

I went down to Mexico,
there I espied -
A pale hue of yellow behind and beside -
A tincture of yellow that clouded the air -
A tone and a tinge of a bright yellow glare.

I went down to Mexico,
there I caught sight -
Of things that were yellow by noon and by night -
Of things that were yellow by dawn and by day -
A yellow refusing to dwindle away.

I went down to Mexico,
there I perceived -
A yellow that shouldn't be ever believed.
A yellow ubiquitous south of the wall.

A yellow that doesn't make much sense at all.

Andrew Wakefield. This man started the “vaccines cause autism” myth. I personally blame him for a lot of modern antivaxers.

/u/Several-Actuary5960

I think I watched YouTube video or documentary on it recently. It was so interesting and also terrifying that one man can breed a bunch of unnecessary fear and hesitancy just because he wanted too make a profit. And his impact still goes on today 20 years later.

/u/notthesedays

And it was all based on a “study” of 12 people.

There is no one more aggressive -
There is no one more irate -
Than the ceaselessly repressive
From the name proceeding "Great".

There are few as prone to bubble
To a simmering degree -

From the land of chips and tea.

There is no one more malignant,

More inaudibly indignant

Nestlé

/u/Drachenfuer

Nestle around here is a great example of when people fight hard enough, they can win against big companies. I live at the base of what most places would consider small mountains. The mountanois area is very, very rural with only a few small roads. However, it is utterly beautiful and many come from other states to honeymoon there and also to watch the leaves change in the fall. The tourists are just enough to boost the local economy but also not make it an urban area. Most of the area is protected in some way. But above all, they have the most absolutly delicious water. I know that sounds weird but its true. Something about the rainfall and the mountains filtering it...don't know. But no one has to filter water up there. It's been tested as very pure and and tastes wonderful to boot. Just enough minerals to give it taste but not enough to make it hard water.

Neatle found out, took notice, whatever. They started plans to make a bottling plant there and started the process to do so. This was done as quietly as possible. Someone made it public and Nestle started a camapaign in the area to make people comfortable with it. The surrounding homeowners started fighting. Their main initial concern was traffic. The roads simply could not handle it. There is a main highway that runs through the area but to get from the proposed plant to the highway with tractor trailers would be a nightmare. Not to mention they get a LOT of snow and ice. Roads are already heavily congested during busy weeks so a stuck tractor trailer would mean no one getting in or out for hours plus the upkeep and exhaust.

That held them back for a bit. Nestle submitted proposals to help with traffic problems and showed how increased taxes coming from them would help with upkeep. They also made special concessions to the homeowners about how and when the trucks would be operating, sound barriers, setting access roads back from neighboring properties, etc. It all sounded logical and reasonable. People supporting kept talking about how much money would be brought in. Things died down and Nestle started to move forward. Then the bombshell dropped. Someone got some documents somewhere and some numbers didn't add or match up. Very, very, very long story short, a lot of people had been flat out lying. Nestle was planning to bottle over three times what they were telling the public, which also meant three times the traffic, facilities, three times the workers (also the traffic from them, where they would live etc.) and facilities. Additionally, they had bribed several local officials to hide this info. Those officials didn't just hide it, they literally were changing documents to hide it. Official documents. Lawsuits were filed. The homeowners and other affected people all got together to present a united front. They got some good local lawyers who really got the ball rolling. Then some bigger lawyers found out and came to help as severely reduced fees. (Mostly pro bono but there are expert/court/outside fees that of course have to be covered.) It was amazing because as far as we knew, the local lawyers were leading the charge and the bigshots were taking a back seat and supporting from their experience.

Nestle's defense was that everything was already going forward and too late to change. Also they pointed out initially that the locals agreed. They also brought forth all these industry experts that showed that there would be little to no impact. The locals and the lawyers fought like rabid dogs and poked holes in everything. Showed the initial agreement was based on false numbers. They brought in state experts, not national paid experts to show the real impact. The most damaging was the inevitable reduction of the water table and proved that the water table was not as deep as they were saying and it would put an area into drought that never sees a true drought. It would decimate the area. The people as well as the environment. The expert was well respected and his numbers and conclusions held up under scrutiny. During this, the officials were indicted. One was convicted I think and the other plead guilty. Don't quote me on that one and there were others that got off scot free but the two that were changing documents and lying publically did not.

Neste lost. They were forced to pack up and leave essentially. It should be said the homeowners were probably listened to a bit more because it is an isolated area and those homeowners and business owners have been there for generations. They know exactly how to build an area for people without impacting the environment significantly and protecting what needs to be protected.

Edit: Sorry to all the replies. To answer, this took place in the Pocono Mountains in Pennsylvania.

Edit Two: OMG thanks for all the awards! I had no idea our little story would get such a huge response!

It rose in its rankness,

And drenched in damnation,
it spiralled and swirled -
It splashed and it splattered, it showered and stank -
A mighty malodorous dampness of dank.

And there, in the wake of this stinking surprise -
Beset by the stench with a squint of the eyes -
Besieged by the banquet of dread and of death -
I gave her a mint and I said:

They cherish the cold in the bite of the breeze!

Fencing

/u/NorthStarZero

Oooo I have a story.
Back in collage, a friend and I used to fence epee after classes. Then - because we were dorks - we'd have these running, Errol-Flynn-eque running swordfights on the way back to our rooms.

Now the thing about epee, as opposed to foil or sabre, is that the whole body is considered a legit target. Stab his foot? Point! So it teaches you to lunge at areas that would normally be off-limits.

Maybe you see where this is going....

We are being idiots. He's running, I'm chasing. He stops, turns, goes en garde, but it is sloppy, because running around like an idiot. I see an opening, and execute the best lunge of my life directly into his junk. Full extension, sword flexed into a "U" - Olympic picture stuff!

Now I am expecting to hear the tok of the tip of my epee contacting his protective cup, but that is not what happens. Instead, there is a muted squish, he goes white, and collapses. The moron was not only not wearing a cup, he had neglected to tell me, and I had tagged him full power right in one of his testicles. Missed the frank, got one of the beans.

Which swelled up to the size of a grapefruit, and he was walking funny for weeks.

Oddly, we never resumed After Class Fencing for Idiots. I wonder why?

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 3  × 1

When Little Timmy grabbed his sword
And faced his waiting foe -
He said: "I am the lightfoot lord,
The fife of fencing, yo!

"I jump and jolt and joust and jab!
I shout en-garde!" said he.
"I hold the hilt and point and stab,
And no one's swift as me!"

And when his sword was knocked away,
He simply smiled and sighed.
He grabbed his other sword that day.

And Timmy fucking died.

He knew just what to do -
"There's no one who can match my pace!"
He said, and that was true.

He ran a hundred miles about,
And half a thousand more -
While other folks were starting out,
He'd finished long before!

"And as for hurdles, bro," he'd boast,
And leap the fence with pride -
Until his balls stayed on the post.

And Timmy fucking died.

/u/The_Hydra7

/u/notagoodboye

Most people don't make a big spectacle of themselves crying in public, unless they're looking for attention. And all of social media is looking for attention, so that goes 1000 times more there.

Obviously there are going to be times when something horrible happens in public which makes you cry on the spot, and of course that's fine... But if you go out of your way to make a scene, out of proportion to the drama, it's a ploy for attention.

/u/pixel8knuckle

Are you implying social media is a big digital circle jerk? At least on Reddit we are just masturbating out our opinions instead of our entire life of everyday actions, I think that's why I'm mostly done with Facebook as a whole other than a tenuous connection to those I don't see.

/u/ImATerriblePerson69

The fact that people still upload their faces, photos, children, and sometimes buttholes to social media at all is MIND BOGGLING to me. I've noticed that Gen-Z in particular does not really value privacy.

/u/PartGalaxy

That's what's so terrifying.

Not only do they NOT value privacy, but actually treat it as suspect if you value it. They instantly assume you're hiding something or being nefarious in some way.

The road to 1984 becoming a reality is being paved by that generation and most people don't realize it.

“I do not care what things they see,
Or where they look inside -
It matters not at all to me -
I have no things to hide.

‘I do not care what things they know,
And neither, friend, should you.
I have no things to hide, and so,
I wonder why you do.

“I do not care,” I proudly swore,
But when it came to share -
They changed what they were looking for.

And now I fucking care.

Waiting your turn in line

/u/memeotional

Robin Williams went to see Joe Rogan's stand-up while wearing a disguise. After the show he waited in line with all the other fans for pictures/signings just to compliment Joe's stand-up.

Mad respect to Robin Williams. He just wanted to be a normal comedy fan without the famous perks and shit.

Edit:

First:

Robin was wearing a hat and had a big beard so it was difficult to recognize him. Even joe didn't recognize him until they exchanged a few pleasantries.

Second:

Joe may have told this story before Robin's passing. He's mentioned it many times.

Third:

All you salty Joe Rogan haters don't know much about comedy. Joe is good. He may not be your preference and that's ok. To those who say he has no comedy skills: I think him doing multiple shows with the best comedian alive (dave chapelle) as recently as a day or two ago, proves you demonstrably false. Gfy.

#3601 – What did you see on the internet as a child that scarred you for life?

/u/Adept-Mulberry-2913

I was seven and looked up “People dying” on youtube, scrolled for a bit, and not long after it was a game of Ask and Receive.

/u/PoshByDefault

I’ve seen many deaths, probably most here on reddit. The one that stuck with me was someone getting ragdolled (spinning) in between a train and a platform whilst standing up. Gonna see if I can find it again
Edit: check replies someone found it
Edit 2: here you go

/u/funkkay

Nah, you’re alright mate.

His comment was waiting - it said, "look at this!
It's something that's morbid, unearthly, amiss!
It's something as dark and as grim as could be!
It's something you'll witness and never unsee!

"It's bleak and abysmal,
it's shocking and sick!
And though it's appallingly, noxiously quick -
It slithers and weedles and curdles inside -
And stays in your mind for forever!" he cried.

"So click on the link and enjoy what's within -
A putrid depiction of sickness and sin!
An image of horror to rot in your head!
What say you?" he asked him.

"... no thank you," he said.

A mess

“Twas truly disgusting,” he said with distress -
”Repulsive, outrageous, revolting, a mess!
Repugnant and rotten and wretched with woe -
Depressing, degrading, and lower than low!

“Twas truly horrendous,” he said with a sigh -
”Horrific!” he sobbed with a tear in his eye.
She listened with pity, as blue as could be.
”What was it?” she asked him.

He whispered:

” ... twas me.”

The FBI were knocking.
The CIA were in.
With DHS behind them -

The DoD were nearing.
The DoJ were here.
With lots of others coming - who waited to appear.

And when they came before me -
These enemies of mine -
I stood inside the doorway.

I whispered:

"... get in line."

Once, while thoroughly drunk, I ordered a pizza and it arrived overcooked. Crust was like dried asphalt and the toppings blackened and singed.

So I pitched the idea to my other drunk buddies that pizza places should let their customers control the pizza ovens through the internet, so we can decide when it's done. Which then lead to an entire design-your-own-pizza machine/website combo, where one could control exactly how much of each ingredient to add using robotic arms and you could watch it cook live through an oven-cam.

Seemed brilliant at the time.

One of my philosophy professors told a joke about a philosopher having a dream in which he met Socrates, but quickly saw the proper rebuttal to his views, which Socrates conceded. Then he met Aristotle, and Descartes, and Kant, and Nietzsche, and Mill, and with each of them presented his contrary position successfully. He knew he was dreaming, but he thought "I have to wake up enough to write this down!" He managed to become conscious enough that he quickly scrawled the words down on some paper, then fell asleep again.

The next morning he woke up, remembered what had happened, and excitedly grabbed the note. It read “yeah, that’s what you say!”

Guy with a farm down the road: "Hey can you come help bale hay tomorrow?"

Me at 16 with no prior bale experience: "sure I'll be there"
Showed up in basketball shorts. Left looking like I spent 3 minutes in a broom closet with 5 cats and a vacuum cleaner I couldn't shut off.

Edit: spelling

Edit2: wow this blew up. So the farmer was a nice guy, he laughed when he saw me, told me what I was getting into, and asked if I wanted to change to jeans. I was only a couple minutes down the road so I could have quickly changed. But I was young and stubborn it was hot and said no. His son around my age was also there, in jeans, and proceeded to laugh at my misfortune. It was a good time though. Great experience and a little under the table cash was a great incentive.

I've also had cats, and I've had the unfortunate experience of being next to one OR holding one when my mom turned a vacuum cleaner on. That is exactly how I looked on my legs.

/u/Mybrainhurts917

The mental picture of a 16-year-old being ravaged by cats in a closet while desperately trying and failing to turn off a vacuum cleaner just cracked me up. Thanks for that.

He looked at the cleaner,
the cats, and himself -
The clothes in the closet,
the shoes on the shelf.
Their whiskers were twitching.
He nodded his head.

He sighed in the silence.

"... let's do this," he said.

edit: thats called testicular torsion edit 2: since you guys liked my suffering i will give you more detail:

on a september morning 2019 i wake up for school. it is a friday (i think the 19th). my balls are aching a little but nothing too bad. i get up and take a shower while im taking the shower the pain gets way worse. i get out and dry myself quickly and then have to gag because of the pain. my mum gets alerted and comes to help me. i tell her to tell dad (she does not have a license) that i need to go to the ER. i get dressed and off we go. the roads are smooth so i didnt have the problem of going over bumpy roads. in front of the ER there is a lady on a computer i go up to her and say 'its my balls' and my dad says 'its probably a kidney stone' because we have that in our family. i go in the room and the do the ultraound thing on my kidneys. the pain goes up from my nut in my left leg my left arm and i think i felt the pain in my throat too. i am naked at this point with 3 men in the room and my dad. my body is shaking my adhd brain is all over the place. the doctor is looking at my kidneys and has checked the right one, then it feels like he takes 20 minutes to look for the left kidney until i say 'my nut hurts not my kidney' he changes to tip of the ultrasound thing to one that is pointy. and this dude. this motherfucker. he just ramst that think in my ballsack like he wats to kill me. at that moment i remember just cold, slow pain going from my balls to the rest of my body and i black out. when i wake up i hear this noise of someone banging on the wall. when i look down its my legs which are now uncontrolably shaking very violently. someone is holding my legs nown now which makes everything worse. the dude is like yeah you have testical torsion. and then they give me pain meds. i get operated. everything is nice. i look at the damage afterward in the hospital bed and my dick just looks absolutley swollen and huge.

#3582 – Was there ever a time you're thankful the pandemic happened? What was the reason? 2021-06-19 18:12:33

/u/heartbreak-nostalgia

/u/MrBigTimeJim

It's a small thing compared to all the horribleness that happened during the pandemic, but I did feel thankful.

My 14 year old dog tore her CCL the week before everything shut down. The vet said she wasn't a good candidate for surgery because of the risks associated with her age, we didn't know what to do. She couldn't put any weight on it at all.

A few days later I lost my job and was staying home all day. I spent a few days researching everything I could about dogs and ligaments, then I got to work.

I designed a whole physical therapy routine for my dog and set the plan in motion. And it worked! Within two months she was able to walk normally without a limp. Within 4 months she was able to move around like she'd never been injured in the first place.

I never would've been able to put in all the time with the physical therapy if I hadn't lost my job, so I can't help but feel a bit thankful. My dog is still around, happy and healthy. She just stole my sock and ran off into the yard. I love that troublemaker.

My dog is still around, happy and healthy. She just stole my sock and ran off into the yard. I love that trouble-maker.

Life is trouble.
Life is doubt.
Life is tough
to figure out.
Some things break
and some things bend.

I will always be your friend.

Some things come
and some things go.
Some things leave you
feeling low.
Some folks lie,
and some pretend.

I will always be your friend.

Life is hard
and life is strange.
Some things alter.
Some things change.
Some things finish.
Some things end.

I will always be your friend.

Ok, without going into too much the week lockdown happened my ex moved out. It was a bad relationship but I was in denial. So now I was locked inside, with a lot of big feelings and no where to go. It forced me to confront myself, a lot of my own mental issues and a lot of my own trauma. I hated it, resisted it and fought it. Eventually though I learned to work on myself slowly, and I don't think that would have happened without lockdown.

The number of people older than you never increases

/u/Vinny_Lam

That's been on my mind a lot actually. I'm 25 and I'm currently still below the average age of the human population. Most people alive right now are older than me. However, that number is dwindling each day and the number of people younger than me increases each day. It makes me realize how fast my life is flying by.

/u/Johnnyfootballhero

Just wait. It gets faster each year. You will be thirty in what will seem like 2-3 years when you look back to being 25. Remember high school? That was almost 10 years ago already! Feels like much less though for you I'm sure.

/u/DJ_Sk8Nite

Someone asked my age the other day and said 32. My sister looked at me and said umm you're 35. I swear I was JUST 32

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 10

In youth, the time for bed was tough -
I couldn't stand to wait -
When "soon" was never soon enough,
And "later" far too late.

The summers stretched an age ahead -
An hour seemed a day.
"Be patient, child," my father said,
"Don't wish your life away."

And so the time would shuffle on,
With every moment spent -
But that was then,
and now it's gone,
I don't know where it went.

I didn't know the person directly, but I worked at a company that had an employee caught on the show. This was particularly problematic, as the company was Nickelodeon

Animation. Everyone who knew the guy was actually pretty shocked. It was particularly rough for his girlfriend at the time, as she also worked at the studio, so there was no hiding from it. For their part, Nickelodeon instituted rigorous background checks for every new employee after the incident, with zero tolerance for any misdeeds involving children. Those background checks are what keeps this lore alive though, as the process is much more intensive than any other studio.

I was like 22 and my car wouldn't start after work. Lots of googling and thought maybe it's the starter. Used the tools in my trunk to remove the starter, walk to the parts store and had them test it. It was bad. Bought a new one, installed it, and drove home. Booyah bitches! Felt good to not have to call my dad or boyfriend to fix my car.

That's awesome. Always great to keep some tools in the car

Heck yeah. My parents had 4 girls. For our 16th birthday we all got a small tool set and an emergency kit for our cars.

I don't work in one anymore, but used to. This isn't really shenanigans, but: the staff is not nearly so impressed by famous or rich people as some of them seemed to think we should be. It was a fancy hotel. We had rich and famous guests all the time. And it was usually the ones nowhere near the top of the ladder who tried to be the most imperious and expected the most deference. If you have to try to convince us you're high status, you aren't. We'd provide polite, professional service for all our guests and try to be helpful and accommodating, but being a C-list actor or whatever isn't going to get you a table in a full restaurant or an upgrade to the already-occupied fancier suites. And if there's a severe blizzard and the airport is closed, we can't open it for you because you're too special to have to wait to fly out. Even if you're a Very Important Businessman.

/u/xavierash

I found while working in one of the higher end hotels in my city that the really famous people don't want attention. At all. They don't want room service, or staff hanging around. Even the welcoming group of the GM and friends is a bit much, just go away and let them be alone. 9/10 times you would just hear video games or a movie from the room. They just want their alone time.

It's the D list celebs who know damn well they're not all that, that demand the attention. Likely to prove to themselves that see, they are important.

And dont even start on people whose biggest claim to fame involves "twitter", "Instagram" or "influencer". God damn parasites who expect to be treated like billionaires but not cough up a single cent.

I had to stay late when I was a manager as one of the female employees parents were running late. She broke down to me about how she had been sexually abused by her best friends father and that he had been doing it to her best friend for years. He was in jail after he did it to her as she reported him and sadly the daughter hated her for turning in her father as she thought it was normal behavior. She has only been working there for a few weeks at this point and we had probably only worked together and handful of times so I really didn't know her that well yet but I think she just needed someone to know she was struggling with it and someone to tell her it wasn't her fault and what he did was wrong.

/u/koopdujour

I think it's easier to tell a thing like this to someone you don't know well. I'm good friends with someone now who, at the beginning of our friendship, confided a similar thing to me. And they hadn't told other friends they'd known for much longer. I think there's a bit of safety in the idea that even if they get rejected by this person, at least they didn't know them well. When I was 11 I overheard my mother telling someone that at least my looks meant she didn't have to worry about me being molested or raped. That fucked me up for years.

/u/pakingermany

Man i'm so sorry. My mom said something similar but less horrible and it still bothers me. She said the i'm not good looking enough to get a guy to marry me. The only way i'd ever find a guy is if i have a good education and can make a good career out of it to get good money.

/u/-Z0nK-

Ironically, it seems like many guys are intimidated by girls with better careers than theirs. So how did your mom's "wisdom" turn out for you?

/u/pakingermany

I found someone in the same field as mine. We both have exactly the same jobs (but in different companies) and earn the same amount. But, we got together when we were students and he's way too good looking for me. So suck on that mom!

/u/Eckse

he's way too good looking for me

Please ask yourself if that's an objective truth or if it's still your mom talking - you might have internalized her bullshit more than you are aware of.

She waits for an answer.

She whispers: "... it's me."

Sugar is so addictive! And while it may not be as destructive as alcohol or hard drugs – it has a similar hold. I’ve “quit” sugar several times. Gone months without it. Eventually I stop craving it as much. I lose weight and feel great. But then, the day eventually comes where I say to myself “one little snickers won’t hurt.” And then BAM I am bingeing. Eating sugar every day. Getting depressed and packing on the pounds. It’s an endless cycle

Worse for your heart than fat

100%

It's frustrating whenever I hear someone say they are trying to reduce their cholesterol levels for their heart health and then go on a carb/sugar-full diet instead of eating eggs/meat. Sure 50 years ago it was easy to claim that food with cholesterol raises our cholesterol, but that's simply not the case. It's actually been proven that eating foods high in cholesterol (like eggs) does not raise our own cholesterol levels in the majority of cases. In cases where a small amount is absorbed our bodies balance it out well with good cholesterol. Sugar just fucks up the whole system. Makes your body produce the bad cholesterol while also lowering the good. Sugar also raises other fat types in the blood.

This is the tip of the iceberg for how bad over-consuming sugar really is.

In my mid twenties I cut sugar (20g carbs or less per day) for a few years, but still drank probably a bottle of vodka (or more) a week and did MDMA/blow once a month and when I had blood work done it was beautiful. Way better than when I didn't drink/do drugs but was addicted to sugar.

/u/mintyquaintchair2

Me too! I’m the most calm person in my friend group and people always come to me for advice. Mentally, I’m probably the most fucked up.

I really think people forget to check up on the “mom friend.” It’s like they are mom- your mom is just there for you but you don’t know all the shit she’s dealing with and neither do you ask

/u/bumpercarbustier

I’m the mom friend. I had a friend ask once why I go above and beyond - she was having a not great week so I sent her a curated pick me up box of goodies. I waffled for a minute, and then said “I do it for everyone else because it’s what I wish someone would do for me, and I know how much it would mean to me to be taken care of that way.”

I take care of everyone, it feels like. Kids and husband, sure. My sisters and friends come to me with petty arguments, vent sessions, mental health moments, etc. I always make sure we have drinks and snacks on the porch for our mail carrier and delivery drivers. My husband has jokingly told me to stop “Momming” the neighborhood.

The emotional load and compassion fatigue is real, but I have to make sure everyone knows that I love and appreciate them.

EDIT: Thank you for all of your kind words, awards, messages, pieces of advice, and love. I am trying to respond to everyone but I may not be able to - please know that I have read your words and they probably made me cry (they did, they all did). I feel very seen and loved. I am working on taking time for myself so I'm not pouring from an empty cup. My husband is also a big giver and goes out of his way to help friends and family - we make a good team and try to give the other time to relax, decompress, and work on self-care.

/u/dirtywook88

Man, find time for yourself even silence. like legit hear your toes crack silent. No tv radio leave me the fuck alone silence. The oh shit its 3:42 leave mom alone silence

/u/bumpercarbustier

I feel like a failure at life.

I was one of the smartest kids in class, and most likely to succeed. After a failed attempt at college, I spent the greater part of a decade doing basically nothing, to the point that I lost contact with lifelong friends (who I've yet to reconnect with). It's only now that I basically forced myself to move out of my mom's house that I am picking myself up piece by piece and doing something with myself.

Related: I am deathly afraid of having to move back in with my mom because I feel I'll fall back to that old habit of doing nothing. I love my mom, but I think I'd break her heart if I even insinuated that environment is part of the reason I feel like I do.

EDIT: THANK YOU so much for all your support and advice. I honestly did not expect so many people to relate to my story. You're all awesome! I'm definitely going to work towards improving myself and my situation. Also, I believe I can contact some of my old friends through Facebook (I know, I know. But still...). Again, thank you so much. his room about 730am and he answered and to my surprise he's a tall, fit guy in his late 20s. He gave my full agreed rate, I could tell he had been drinking. We're sitting on the bed, and I'm trying to ask him questions to keep the mood light and friendly. And he starts to cry, like he's balling his eyes out. I could tell he wasn't crying beforehand, just really wasted. I was so shocked I didn't know what to do, especially since he's this macho guy (I figured out he was in the Armed Forces). He told me he was in town for his fathers funeral and his emotions and feelings were just hitting him and he wanted someone to be there with him. So I stayed the whole time and I let him talk and grieve and held him for a bit. We didn't do anything sexual except a kiss at the end when my driver picked me up. He gave me his number and told me to call him if I was ever in his city, I still have it.

/u/theofficialnsf

You can hire sex workers just for this? I mean, is that part of your job?

Usually at night I just can't stand to be alone with my thoughts. It's like my mind throws me any sadness it can get, and I just start crying. Nobody I loved has died recently, it's just how my life has been. And I talk to myself a lot, I fantasize someone being there with me and listening to me, comforting me little by little. And I always just wish someone could be with me to actually listen. I don't want to pay attention to my mind. I just wish there was another person I could focus on.

I mean, I can't hire anyone for anything. But I didn't think that was possible

Edit: I delete reddit to save space on my phone for 1 hour or so and wow. So many replies. Was thinking of deleting this comment later because it felt a little too personal but um. Thank you all of you for the many replies! Hehe

So it all started with this fucking gorilla ...

/u/MatrixReaper

We avenged him in January 2021. Using Gamestop it took 6 years to do it.

/u/FuckYeahPhotography

If it wasn't for Harambe dying we would never have had the cultural phenomenon that was dicks out for Harambe and everything that came with it. Money raised for wildlife protection charities, memes, unity, the recognition of Harambe, etc.

So it begs the question after 6 years: do we value Harambe or the idea of Harambe? Was his death worth it? Considering most of us would never have been graced by him or cared to without the incident. What is the greatest value of this gorilla, or would we sacrifice all this just so he could roam once again? Oohh ooh ahh ahh?

The only thing that is certain is that our dicks are still out, and they always will be. These are the dicks that beat back against the unyielding dread of existence itself. Monke or human. For so long as our dicks are out, Harambe will always be with us one way or the other.

So it begs the question after 6 years: do we value Harambe or the idea of Harambe? Was his death worth it? Considering most of us would never have been graced by him or cared to without the incident. What is the greatest value of this gorilla, or would we sacrifice all this just so he could roam once again?

“If death was mine to pick and choose -
If life was mine to make -
If I could give to those who lose,
And draw from those who take -

“If I could fix a former day -
If I could heal the past -
If I could help a moment stay,
Or make a moment last -

“If I could take a second small,
And make it change,” he said -

“I wouldn’t change a thing at all.

... I think you’re better dead.”

/u/ryguy1205

i'm not really sure if it counts or not but as a male who used to be extremely overweight i would always have people(guys and girls) trying to touch my man boobs. it made me self conscious and uncomfortable and i voiced that but people continued to do it. they would grab them or hit them and pretty much everything in between. it happened very frequently as well but i guess nobody saw a problem with it, whether it was because i was a guy or because it wasn't a traditional form of harassment.

/u/94rellic

I still have mine, but I'm sorry people did you like that. Man that must have sucked. I feel terrible having people just point out that they exist.

I feel terrible having people just point out that they exist.

Perceived imperfections,
no matter how small -
They make you think less of yourself overall.
So when they debase you, or go on too far -
You don't really stop them.

That's just who you are.

You watch while it happens,
for they can't be blamed -
You know that it's you who should just be ashamed.
For if you were stronger for longer, you dream -
You'd change where you're from,

But fuck all that nonsense.

It just isn't true.

My childhood best friend. We were best friends from 4 to 17. He battled with Leukemia from 13 to 17. The last year of his life he was constantly in and out of the hospital and was immunocompromised. I got to see him but we had to keep our distance. We were planning on going to the same college for engineering. I know all he would want to know is if I did it and kept moving. I plan on naming my first born after him. 12 years later and I still think about him most days and he is my driving force to stay positive and keep on pushing.

#3526 – How do you ask for sex respectfully?
2021-03-20 18:48:31

/u/Wished-this-was-easy

Because a lot of answers in this thread are jokes, I want to give you a sincere one - it depends. Here are some scenarios: If you just want to have sex, not really a relationship - in a dating app or at a date: "I'm searching for something casual, how about you?"

When you're making out - somewhere outside: "Wanna go back to my/your place?"

When you're making out - at someone's place: "Wanna move this to the bedroom?"

When you're making out - on the bed: "Can I take your shirt off?"

When you are already naked: "Can I/you put it in?"

You could also tell the other person what you would like to do, rather than asking a question (like "I would really like to kiss you right now") but that may requires interpreting their body language. If you have problems with that, just stick to the questions.

Good luck!

Edit: There are some people who claim that „Can I put it in?“ is unnecessary. I sometimes like my foreplay to last a little longer, so I think it's a valid one to ask.

/u/Moodypanda69

Alternatively instead of saying "can I/you put it in?" You can say "do you want to keep going? "Do you want to Go further? "Or "is this okay ?"while touching or doing stuff with them.

Edit: wow guys thank you for the rewards !

None of this "just get someone to cough on you" bullshit.

/u/HeyLuciano

A bus seat? Luxury!

/u/EvryMthrF_ngThrd

In my day, all we had to lick for disease was either the farm animals on the edge of town, or go for a dip in the outhouse.

Well, of course, we had it tough. We used to have to get up out of shoebox at twelve o'clock at night and lick road clean with tongue. We had two bits of cold gravel, worked twenty-four hours a day at mill for sixpence every four years, and when we got home our Dad would slice us in two with bread knife.

/u/andante528

Right.

I used to get up in the morning at half-past ten at night, half an hour before I went to bed, eat a lump of freezing-cold poison, work 28 hours a day at mill and pay mill owner to let us work there, and when we got home, our dad used to murder us in cold blood each night and dance about on our graves, singing “Hallelujah!”

With whips for incentive and nothing for pay!
And when it was time for the workday to end -
We instantly started another, my friend!

“We ate only handfuls of gravel and dust -
And drank from a trough that was covered in rust -
And lay on a bucket of bones for a bed!

/u/Fruntledumjam

/u/brosafe

I briefly had a co-worker at my current job at a local grocery store. We’ll just call him “Fred”.

Fred is one of those people who’s always talking on his phone in the break room and that’s my personal pet peeve at work. More often than not, he’s usually arguing with his girlfriend and he doesn’t seem to care that anyone’s listening. He’d do other annoying, gross things like chewing with his mouth wide open and wiping his boogers all over the place, but then there was one day when he tried to flush a hot pocket down the toilet.

Needless to say that it didn’t play out so well and that temporarily put an end to our closest employee restroom right by the break room. He surprisingly didn’t get fired over that, but he did get fired when one of his old high school teachers came in shopping and he threw a whole sack of potatoes at her. She was an elderly woman who got seriously injured and both the ambulance and the cops had to get involved. I never did hear about what happened to his old teacher, but Fred on the other hand is currently in jail for not only assaulting his teacher, but he apparently also attacked his lawyer for reasons unknown.

That's Fred.

/u/Fruntledumjam

/u/Lil_BootySnack

I quit smoking due to a coworker that would follow me to every smoke break to talk about their problems when I needed some god damn me-time.

Its been 3 years, and I still haven't bothered to pick the habit back up.

Edit to answer some questions:

1) IRL I am super introverted they just started joining me one day and decided I am their best friend ever.

2) They were trying to get me to smoke more often so they could talk at me more. (They do not, and have never smoked.) I was intending on quitting... at some point. But I would probably still be smoking without this factor.

3) They were very upset when I quit, so much that they started crying. I can never tell them they are the reason I quit even though I probably owe them my life.

4) I split the word goddamn for emphasis. god. damn.

5) They are nice enough and want to be helpful but they are also oddly possessive and would get angry with me and mess with my stuff when I wouldn't go on breaks with them. Our shift would probably drown without this person (very hard working) but I have spoken with management and been on the verge of going to HR over their weird control issues.

(They started escalating their behavior shortly before the pandemic hit, the 1 other person that tolerated their demands for an extended period of time got fired, putting 100% of their focus on me.)

Luckily telling them they've crossed the line and refusing to engage with them for a day gets them to back off for the chance of having someone to talk to again.

Working from home has been the best thing ever and I am worried about going back and having to figure out what to do with the dynamic.

She consistently tries to discourage women from furthering their education, and constantly tries to get women she is threatened by fired. She is a goddam nightmare.

/u/optcynsejo

I have a friend that went to work for a big Silicon Valley company. She feels threatened by older employees like this while, from what she describes and from what I know about her, she is becoming this type of woman too.

She's talented but also gets validation through her work. It doesn't help that Silicon Valley seems cutthroat to the extent that your coworkers feel more like rivals gunning for your position than colleagues. I've had to be like, no the 22 year old coming out of college with good ideas isn't necessarily a threat just because she had 5 years of newer innovation to study than you. # #3519 – Insomniacs and troubled sleepers of Reddit, when you wake up at 3am and can't fall back asleep, what do you do??

2021-03-13 14:45:30

/u/tellmeastorybitch

/u/Melgitat_Shujaa

I get up for the day. I've had some days where I'm running on half an hour of sleep. It truly sucks but I don't know what else to do, if I just lay there I never actually fall back asleep and usually end up getting out of bed a few hours later.

/u/Orabbit7

Consider seeing a sleep doctor/therapist. Saved my life

/u/embrasse-moi_bien

I'm considering this. Can you share more about your experience?

/u/Orabbit7

In my situation, I obviously have some kind of problem. Maybe it is CTE, maybe ADHD, maybe a combination of those, or some other mental illness such as schizophrenia (brain waves resemble but tests have not confirmed). Anyway, my brain is not great.

The sleep clinic did some lighter then more intrusive tests, culminating with a sleep test. They diagnosed me with a significantly advanced (likely familial) sleep phase/pattern, or "morning lark." My rhythm is more like 4am wake up, compared to an 8am norm. So for me no matter when I go to sleep, whether throughout the day have been ex-exercising, busy brain, idle brain, when I wake up I'm up. We started with sleep training and CBT (edit: not cock and ball, hahaha very funny - https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cognitive\_behavioral\_therapy\_for\_insomnia), but it did not work. Then we went to medication, vitamin d and melatonin, without success. Now I have zopiclone for "break fix" nights.

Alcohol makes my sleep horrible, so indulging is an infrequent luxury

I cannot use zopiclone all the time, but often enough to smooth out my life, which was previously filled with frequent unbearable days. Fortunately zopiclone works very well for me. I take half a pill at Eg. 430 and it gets me to 630-7 without any grogginess.

Edit:

I will add, I maintain fanatically religious sleep hygiene. I have not been out of bed between 10-11pm since the pandemic started. Outside of the pandemic would be only if some 1-off activity, sporting event, family gathering, etc. I have found that to not help, whether I sleep at 8pm or 1am; or 11pm, I am often if not always extremely challenged.

Going through life in this way was hurting my relationships, work, health, etc. I have had this treatment for about 4 years now. I have never had to bump up my consumption of zopiclone above the limit, and I notice no other effects. There have been times where I have NO idea how I would have made it through a week without it. Other weeks I can self-manage.

I touch base with the sleep doctor minimum once a year, or when something changes. Overall I am okay, but it is slowly getting worse. I am waking easier, and it's getting less frequent that I can get to sleep on my own. Sometimes I can live with it, sometimes I need a pill. I have never had a circumstance of my pills not working, and I have stayed within me treatment schedule

Edit 2:

For myself, I have tried pot in various forms as well as other medication. I would recommend before people venture down the self medicating path that you see a medical professional. I have a sustainable situation that I have maintained for about 4 years. If you need help, ask your doctor!!

/u/thedramaticobserver

We started with sleep training and CBT, but it did not work.

I am surprised the Cock and Ball Torture didn't work.

/u/0rabbit7

Yea, cognitive behavioural therapy did nothing for me. I would try cock and ball torture if I thought it would help. Sex sometimes helps, but often it just makes me feel better. Nothing wrong with that, but the goal is sleep

Next he counted sheep in flocks -
Sheep in streets and city blocks -
Sheep in towns and trains and cars -
Sheep on moons and sheep on Mars.

Then he counted sheep in space -
Counted sheep in every place -
Spent the night-time counting sheep.

No,

I have a cat, a puppy, and a dog. Cat likes to lure the puppy under the bed and he can get under but gets stuck in the middle where it's the lowest. I have to rescue him (usually around 2 am and he wakes me up by scratching the floor trying to get out). Cat also likes to knock off things from the counter he knows puppy should not be chewing on. Puppy and cat like to wrestle with each other. But dog doesn't like the ruckus and barks at them to stop. Cat doesn't like the barking so then he chases dog. Puppy follows cat and there's a train of 3 Tom and Jerry style through the house. At the end of the day tho they are always in a big cuddle pile so I think they'll be okay.

Puppy follows cat and there's a train of 3 Tom and Jerry style through the house. At the end of the day tho they are always in a big cuddle pile so I think they'll be okay.

The puppy, the dog and the pup and the cat -
The cat and the dog and the puppy at that -
The dog and the puppy, the cat and the pup -
Go downwards and upwards, and downwards and up!

At first they go leftwards, and then they go right -
By dawn and by morning, by daytime and night -
By spring and by summer, by winter and fall -
Wherever, together forever, go all!

And when they have hustled and bustled and raced -
And hurried and scurried and scampered and chased -
The dog and the cat, and the cat and the pup -

They stop all their running and just...

... cuddle up.

#3516 – People living in Japan, what are your stories about neckbeards that have visited your country?

2021-03-11 17:56:21

/u/Nyarlathotep1349

/u/GravityTxT

The vast majority will come over and geek out for a week in specific entertainment districts and tourist traps, which is pretty much live and let live for me. Some neckbeard do end up moving to Japan though, and they definitely exist in FOB expat/English teacher circles. That being said, there aren't really any "stories" that I know of that are particularly noteworthy. Most of them come here, go through culture shock and realize that Japan isn't all it was cracked up to be, and go home once they have had their fill. Some get stuck in bad marriages/ have kids and end up staying in low paying English teaching jobs for the rest of their lives since they have no other marketable skills/career options, and that lot is pretty sad. A small but notable percentage will break down because of the lack of a social support system/ poor mental health care, which is always sad to see as well.

Edit: seems this comment bummed a lot of people out lol. Remember that this is specifically in the context of neckbeards. There are plenty of normal people, fun times, and great experiences to be had for those who move to Japan with a solid plan and a good head on their shoulders.

/u/TurtleTucker

Japan was an awesome place to live but I don't know if I could stay there permanently. It would really depend on the job and location. The mentality is literally "work all the time". There are people eligible to retire who don't retire because they feel society will look down on them if they do. The suicide rate is astronomical. There were a ton of perks to living there, but again... it would really depend on the situation if I was offered to go back permanently.

Also, don't fall for the tourist traps if you're in Tokyo. There are better places for merch and games than Akihabara. Harajuku sucks. Just avoid that one. And Shinjuku is fun, but a bit lacking and expensive compared to districts like Ueno.

/u/SurrealPenguin

I'll always remember about 15 years ago I was travelling through Europe when an older Japanese man asked if he could practice speaking English with me.

I learned that his job was to coach his fellow countrymen on how to be retired, as the transition is so jarring for many it was ruining lives. It blew my mind, but makes sense based on what I know of the culture there.

/u/Server6

We probably need this in the US as well. I know several recently retired people who just sit in their house all day watching cable news - which is literal poison at this point.

/u/twotall88

There's been a saying in the USA for a long time, don't stop moving when you retire or you'll stop moving forever. You have to have something to do in retirement to be healthy.

/u/stolperman

It can be also seen in a literal way. In Germany we say, "Wer rastet, der rostet" (= "The one who makes a break [for too long] will become rusty") and this isn't specifically for older people, but for people who don't do sports as well.

Old people back in the days stopped "moving" at some point and didn't do any sports. New research found out, that they are actually capable of doing more, like running or other sports, and it can make their lives longer if done properly.

/u/herefromthere

The one who rests, rusts. :)

When Little Timmy reached the age,
And found the time to rest -
"I'll make myself a noble sage,
At last!" the lad expressed.

"I'll spend my nights and days in sleep!
I'll live and learn to be!
And when my time is mine to keep,
I'll use it all for me!

"I'll only stir for moments small!
I'll barely move!" he cried.

But soon he didn't move at all.

And Timmy fucking died.

How I would feel about Jeff.

Jeff was a really big deal in middle school. We went to different elementary schools so I never even heard of him prior to middle school but as soon as I got to middle school his name was going around the school a lot and it became clear he was a big deal. Jeff was the toughest guy in our grade, the most athletic, the best looking, and the coolest according to both the guys and the girls. The guys wanted to be his friend and if they weren't then they were wary of him because of how tough he was and he gave off that vibe that he wasn't someone to make angry. All the girls loved him and he was making out with girls and going out with them all the time. He even went out with at least two girls a year ahead of us in school and one of them was the most popular girl in her grade. This was basically unheard of but he did it.

He was in my class in the 6th grade and it became pretty clear that despite his coolness, toughness, and ability with the girls at a young age, Jeff had some problems and couldn't control himself that well. He would act out in funny ways by causing mischief and trouble but he would also act out in less funny-yet-troubling ways by doing things like smoking cigarettes on school grounds with other troubled kids and he would occasionally get physical with any guy dumb enough to piss him off. Because of this, he got detentions and suspensions.

He was born on September 11th and on 9/11 I have no recollection of him being at school that day although I'll bet that he was. I remember sitting in our class and being glued to the TV for a while as our teacher anxiously looked on in horror and us young kids didn't know what the hell was happening. Jeff would usually act out and get into trouble but that day it's like he wasn't even there even though he likely was. His birthday was ruined.

That year our class had a field trip to some place that I don't remember but I do remember the bus ride to and from the trip. Jeff and I were on the same bus and for some reason still unknown to me he decided to sit next to me. On the way there he was talking to me about different things and since I thought he was a bully and tough and I was afraid of him I just was nice and would listen and then follow up with questions and try to interact with him and he seemed to be cool with that. Then at some point he started talking about his home life and his dad and he said that his dad would hit him upside the head. When he told me this he had his eyes averted and sort of looking down and he said it kind of like it was a joke but I could tell that he was upset by it and was trying to play it off cool and by acting like it wasn't some big deal. On the bus ride back to school we stopped at some place and there were these vending machines that some kids were getting snacks out of. I went to get myself a snack and a drink and I got my drink but something happened when I tried to get my snack. I can't remember what it was exactly. It may have been that I thought I had more money than I did and when I went to get my snack I came up short for money, or it could have been that the machine ate my money. Whatever happened, I couldn't get my snack and I was upset because I was pretty hungry. Without asking him or saying anything, Jeff just stepped in front of me and said "I got you" and put a dollar in the machine for me so I could get my snack. Then we sat next to each other on the way back to school after that.

At some point during that year we had a substitute teacher for our class and some kids were acting out and I was laughing because it was funny. Our substitute was a middle-aged woman and she was not happy at all. She was yelling at us to shut up and knock it off and she physically grabbed me by the shoulders and then started pushing me downward into my chair and desk and I was frightened by it. I was scared and didn't know what to do and she was hurting me. When class ended Jeff grabbed me by the arm and said "Come on we're going to the office" and he basically pushed me and pulled me down the hallway to the principal's office. I wasn't going to say no to the guy in a million years because I was afraid of him. We get to the office and he does all the talking and tells the principal what happened while I just sit there in silence, nodding each time that the principal asks me if what Jeff is saying is true. See, the principal had and would go on to have numerous run-ins and issues with Jeff because Jeff could not behave and kept getting into trouble way too often. The principal was wary of him and didn't trust him much and I suppose he had good reason not to. However, I still remember the concerned look on his face when Jeff was telling him what happened. When Jeff was done talking we left the office and the principal said he'll look into the incident and that's all I remember. I figured that Jeff was just using me to act out and cause trouble or give the principal a headache in having to deal with him yet again. I was too afraid of Jeff to say to him that I didn't want to go to the office so what happened happened and that was that.

Jeff was expelled from school early in the 8th grade. Word spread around the school quickly because the kid was such a big deal. I don't remember why he got kicked out exactly or what the final straw was. He basically disappeared in 2003 and I never saw him again...or so I thought.

He was off my radar for years and I had heard that he got kicked out of his second school after he got kicked out of ours and then in high school he got kicked out of a catholic school and then wound up at a pretty crappy public school. I didn't know at the time whether he even finished high school or not.

In the fall of 2007 I was a senior in high school and I was hanging around at a friend's house after a party ended on the weekend. Seemingly out of nowhere, Jeff shows up with a guy I used to be friends with in earlier years. I hadn't seen Jeff since 2003. He was still big, looked about 6 foot 3, and still had that kind of socially and physically dominant way about him. He was joking around with the guy he came with and he playfully pushed him on the shoulder after making a joke and the guy almost lost his balance and fell over. Jeff just couldn't help it. Being the alpha male and dominant is how he always was. I was sitting on the couch with my friend and the guy who hosted the party and then the guy who almost got pushed over smiled at Jeff a bit and said "You remember [insert my name here]?" and Jeff stared at me for a few seconds. I definitely didn't look exactly like I did in middle school but he stepped closer to me and looked me in the eyes and put his hand out to shake my hand but didn't say anything to me. Then he went back to drinking the beer he had and joking around. That's the last time I saw him before he died.

Jeff died a few years ago, I think from a drug overdose, heroin probably. He was 27. I determined that at some point his father, who was abusive and likely violent with him when he was a kid, left the family, likely when Jeff was about 15 or 16. It looked like Jeff and his mom and little sister had to leave our town and they wound up in a crum-mier, more rundown area. He fell into the druggie crowd in later years after he was kicked out of middle school and I suppose this shouldn't have been surprising because his older brother overdosed on heroin and died when me and Jeff were in the 7th grade. I remember that going around the school at the time and people talking about it in whispers. It took me until I was 30 years-old to put my brief-yet-meaningful moments with Jeff together. I went my whole life thinking that he was the school bully and I was afraid of him yet I realized eventually that I never saw him bully anyone and that he never bullied me. I remembered our time on the bus together and our trip to the office but I couldn't connect the dots at the time. Now I realize that on the bus, Jeff was grateful that I listened to him talk about his dad hitting him and because I was nice and good to him, when I needed help at the vending machines he had my back, no questions asked. When our substitute teacher did what she did to me, I later realized that this happened after the bus trip and vending machines day. Because I was nice and good to him, when he saw what the teacher did to me he didn't decide to use me as a way to act out and start trouble - he was just trying to help me because he apparently cared and was concerned. When I saw him after that party was over in high school, he truly did remember me and he remembered those moments we had together where we had each other's backs in the 6th grade. He could have just said "What's up" when the other guy asked him if he remembered me, but instead of that he moved towards me and shook my hand because even after years of having nothing to do with each other, those 6th grade memories came back to him that night but not to me at the time. At 30, I put it all together. I'm truly sad that he's gone and when we were 12 year-olds in the 6th grade I would have never thought that I would say that about him, feel that way about him, or that he would die young. The guy was the biggest deal and the last person I would have thought wouldn't make it in life but sadly his demons and troubles took him away. The guy is a childhood legend to me, and I know that he is to other people we grew up with as well.

The guy was the biggest deal and the last person I would have thought wouldn't make it in life but sadly his demons and troubles took him away.

With my hands outstretched around me,
In the silence and the spray -
I was drowning when you found me, Slowly sinking
by the day.

I was treading water only -
I was choking with a smile -
I was going under lonely,
When you held me up a while.

But the ocean light was dimming,
And you couldn't hold for long.

I had spent my lifetime swimming.

And I've never been that strong.

Or start a ship in space to Mars,
Or take a plane to somewhere new,
A car, a train to timbuktu -

I put my snoozer out of reach -
I dream about the waves, the beach,
The wind, the sun, the fish, the foam,
And make a wish to run, to roam
To where the air is scented breeze
And fair between contented trees,
And in the lake I take a leap...

And then I wake.

And wish for sleep.

I viewed the stars at night -
I learned to craft a boat or two
To sail across the sea -
I found the perfect thing to do,
And spent some time with me -
I shaped myself a silver scene
Of homes and hills and lakes -
I made a glossy magazine
For baking tasty cakes -
I took a swim beyond the tide
And through the foam and spray -

I wandered roads and streets and streams,
And lands from sands to shore -

I lived my hopes...

I lived my dreams...

2021-02-20 18:25:11

/u/wayne88imps

Oh man, my time to shine! I've been working at a waste transfer station ("garbage dump") for many years. The worst I've seen (just garbage, not counting stuff brought to the hazmat department):

- a freezer stuffed with a skinned, rotting, headless deer carcass. We nearly called the cops before we realized it wasn't human.
- Used needles. The worst being a tie between "porcupine couch" and the lady who literally handed me a paper bag full of syringes she found during a park cleanup.
- large container of old crystallized picric acid. Bomb squad had to deal with that one.

The best:

- a high end laptop in perfect condition except for a tiny crack on the lcd panel. Easy DIY repair that took $40 and 5 minutes, thing would've cost $1.5K new
- enough brand new furniture to literally furnish my whole apartment
- a high end military grade inflatable boat, brand new

The weirdest:

- a 1st gen platelet counting machine, complete with weird tubes of bright green liquid and mercury. When I was prepping it for hazmat disposal I had to call the company that bought the company that made it for some info... they never digitized the records but the oldest repair tech still working was super excited because he remembered servicing them 50 years ago.
- coffin. No body, just the coffin. Couldn't see anything wrong with it either.

- buckets of testicles (from a ranch) that had been sitting out in the summer heat for a week. Smelled so bad my coworker hurled. That's not the weird part... the weird part is the guys wanted their buckets back. Do you know how bad it has to smell to make a garbage collector puke? And they wanted them back?!
- the $10k duffel bag. Lady came in super upset because earlier she threw out a duffel bag that she didn't know her boyfriend kept cash in. Over $10,000 in cash. We never found the bag.
- 16 full size barrels of old vegetable grease some guy had saved up in his garage. He was planning to make a biodiesel car or something.

Edit: a lot of people are asking if we get to keep stuff. Officially, no. It's not against the law as far as I know (except for illegal stuff like drugs), but it's against our policy. However workers do salvage things... as long as it's discreet and they're not selling it, management doesn't get involved. Selling stuff is a big no.

We don't fight over stuff. In fact we'll keep an eye out for things colleagues might need. Most of what we salvage is actually tools and stuff we use at the dump. I've also started a management approved program to give away free household products that would otherwise be hazardous waste (paint, oil, cleaners, etc). Some dumps also run thrift stores to divert materials from landfill, but we don't have the space.

Grew up a small town so everyone knew everyone. Our garbage man (Lee) would regularly cull out items for us because he knew my dad would tinker on them. Lee gave me my first bike, which only needed to be painted, and so so many books.

He passed a few years ago. When I saw the notice I called up my sister and we had a bit of a nostalgic cry about what

He typed his reply with a passion, a pique,
An ardent ambition, a spirit to speak -
He wrote with abandon, he penned with a zest,
A burning, a yearning in each key he pressed.

His words, they were simple, but honest and true -
His purpose distinguished and principled too -
His reasons were noble -
His meaning was clear -
Emotion that leaked from his eye in a tear.

And when he was finished, he stopped with a sigh -
With triumph, he wiped at that tear in his eye.
And then, he decided, before he'd submit,
To read what he'd written.

He said: "... this is shit."

if I had $100k I would probably use it to buy a van to live in

/u/HaitianRoulette

That's what I said. For years now I've wanted to live in a van. Not permanently, but for 6 months or so. The main thing stopping me is that good camper vans cost a lot.

EDIT: Since y'all started a conversation about it, I think something like this would be my dream van: <https://sportsmobile.com/mercedes-benz-4x4-sprinter/>

/u/Heins

If you buy a decent bigger van that runs good you can convert them to livable fairly cheap if your willing to put the work in.

/u/HaitianRoulette

I've looked into this for a while now. Don't think I'm tough enough just yet. Plus, now I have neither a garage nor a driveway, so that's not an option.

/u/HASHTAGBUTTCHUG

I bought a converter van right as COVID was starting. It was 10k CAD but it doesn't have all the bells and whistles. If you could find regular places to shower that'd be a huge bonus

“Cocaine is God’s way of saying, ‘Son, you make too much money!”

Wages wasted? Finance fleeting?
Funds fugacious, fast depleting?
Managed money, nonsustaining?
Savings strapped or sapped and draining?

Friend, beware the glowing, glitter,
Sweet, seductive urge to fritter -
Spare a thought for simple verses
Sadly penned for empty purses!

Be aware of how you’re spending:
Curb the constant, never-ending,
Smaller paths to lose a penny -
Each amounts to more than many!

Check your bank for each transaction,
Each reduction, each subtraction!
Make your plan, and don’t forget it -
Do it now, and don’t regret it!

But, if cash is not a trouble -
And you’ve all you need or double -
And you’ve time, and think it’s funny -

I say fuck it.

#3498 – Waiters/waitresses of Reddit, what's the most awkward first date you had to witness first hand?

2021-02-17 17:24:03

/u/l34u05

I was a bartender at a local place that was somewhat close to the university, but far enough away that it was a “hidden gem”; we used to get first dates all the time, most of them were Tinder-esque.

I remember one time specifically, this guy comes in and sits down at a table alone, and kept checking his watch. A watch? I wander over, greet him, and ask what he'd like to start off with to drink. “Ummm, I dunno, I'm meeting someone, is it rude to have a drink already before they get here?” I smiled, asked if he was waiting for a date, he said yes, and I suggested a beer to sip on instead of a mixed drink; it might calm his nerves a bit, but won't get him inebriated too quickly so he could enjoy his date. He agreed, apologized profusely for bothering me (which, he hadn't bothered me at all) , and continued to wait.

After about 20 mins of him waiting (and him checking his watch every 5), I wandered over again and asked if he'd like to look at a food menu, perhaps munch on something while he waited. He declined, and glanced at his watch again. I made a comment about his watch and how I appreciated his use of “analog technology”, and he laughed nervously and said he didn't want to pull out or use his phone during his date, because he didn't want to seem disingenuous (how cute!)

Another 30 minutes pass, and my high-strung hopeful was still alone. I asked if he'd changed his mind about some food, and he merely shook his head, defeated...”I'll just finish my beer and go... I'm sorry I wasted one of your tables...”

On his last swig of beer, a cute looking girl walked in, eyeing the room, obviously looking for someone. "Chelsea! Over here!", he started to stand, grin from ear to ear...the entrance was near my drink well, which I had just happened to be standing in. This night was particularly quiet, and the acoustics allow me to hear her chitter chatter in the entryway (curved ceilings)...I look over to the girl after seeing my hopeful's eyes light up, and she had a disgusted look of, "dammit" in her face, she rolled her eyes and made contact with mine, sighed, and said, "are you fucking kidding me with this guy?", screwed on her fake smile, and immediately sat down, avoiding a half-hug attempt by my hopeful.

The entire date felt forced; every time I went to check on them, she was ordering another drink, and he was doing his best to try and pull conversation from this girl, who had her face in her phone the entire time.

About an hour later, I watch the girl get up with her purse, announce that she had to use the restroom, and wandered away towards the restrooms. I immediately went over to my hopeful to ask how his date was going. "I don't think she likes me...", he trailed off. I gave him a pat on the shoulder, and said it looked to me like he was doing everything right. He smiled, thanked me, and I went back to my bar.

The girl never came back. He footed her tab. $90 worth of drinks, his two beers were $8.

He continued to come back as a regular, and I became his wing-woman. I eventually set up Mr Hopeful with Ms Lonely-heart. They're still together.

Edit: spelling

Edit 2: I was not anticipating such an interest in Mr Hopeful and Ms Lonely-Heart, but I will gladly tell what I know of their story! I'm at work currently, and I'd like to give the same amount of effort to put into their story, as I did initially, so I will definitely post when I get home a little later! Thank you all for the awards!

/u/IWillBiteYou

There isn't a someone for everyone, friends -
And sometimes, that isn't the way that it ends.
Some people embark on their journey alone -
And others are perfectly fine on their own.

There isn't some magical pairing of hearts -
A soul that's divided in multiple parts -
Two halves of a person that wished on a star -

But sometimes,
just sometimes,
I think that there are.

I’m not sure but someone who SHOULD be canceled is Chris Brown. He literally beat the sh*t out of Rihanna and radio stations canceled him for like a day. Dude is a total scumbag and is still able to put out hits and make millions.

/u/naginarb

A verbal argument ensued and Brown pulled the vehicle over on an unknown street, reached over Robyn F. with his right hand, opened the car door and attempted to force her out. Brown was unable to force Robyn F. out of the vehicle because she was wearing a seat belt. When he could not force her to exit, he took his right hand and shoved her head against the passenger window of the vehicle, causing an approximate one-inch raised circular contusion.

Robyn F. turned to face Brown and he punched her in the left eye with his right hand. He then drove away in the vehicle and continued to punch her in the face with his right hand while steering the vehicle with his left hand. The assault caused Robyn F.'s mouth to fill with blood and blood to splatter all over her clothing and the interior of the vehicle. Brown looked at Robyn F. and stated, 'I'm going to beat the sh- out of you when we get home! You wait and see!' "

The detective said "Robyn F." then used her cell phone to call her personal assistant Jennifer Rosales, who did not answer. "Robyn F. pretended to talk to her and stated, 'I'm on my way home. Make sure the police are there when I get there.'

"After Robyn F. faked the call, Brown looked at her and stated, 'You just did the stupidest thing ever! Now I'm really going to kill you!'

"Brown resumed punching Robyn F. and she interlocked her fingers behind her head and brought her elbows forward to protect her face. She then bent over at the waist, placing her elbows and face near her lap in [an] attempt to protect her face and head from the barrage of punches being levied upon her by Brown.

Brown continued to punch Robyn F. on her left arm and hand, causing her to suffer a contusion on her left triceps (sic) that was approximately two inches in diameter and numerous contusions on her left hand.

"Robyn F. then attempted to send a text message to her other personal assistant, Melissa Ford. Brown snatched the cellular telephone out of her hand and threw it out of the window onto an unknown street.

"Brown continued driving and Robyn F. observed his cellular telephone sitting in his lap. She picked up the cellular telephone with her left hand and before she could make a call he placed her in a head lock with his right hand and continued to drive the vehicle with his left hand.

Brown pulled Robyn F. close to him and bit her on her left ear. She was able to feel the vehicle swerving from right to left as Brown sped away. He stopped the vehicle in front of 333 North June Street and Robyn F. turned off the car, removed the key from the ignition and sat on it.

"Brown did not know what she did with the key and began punching her in the face and arms. He then placed her in a head lock positioning the front of her throat between his bicep and forearm. Brown began applying pressure to Robyn

F.'s left and right carotid arteries, causing her to be unable to breathe and she began to lose consciousness.

"She reached up with her left hand and began attempting to gouge his eyes in an attempt to free herself. Brown bit her left ring and middle fingers and then released her. While Brown continued to punch her, she turned around and placed her back against the passenger door. She brought her knees to her chest, placed her feet against Brown's body and began pushing him away. Brown continued to punch her on the legs and feet, causing several contusions.

Robyn F. began screaming for help and Brown exited the vehicle and walked away. A resident in the neighborhood heard Robyn F.'s plea for help and called 911, causing a police response. An investigation was conducted and Robyn F. was issued a Domestic Violence Emergency Protective Order.

and Inkheart as well.

He thought of Encino,
and Airheads,
The Scout -
The Mummy: The Tomb of the Dragon (with doubt) -
He thought of his movies and stared at his note.

“Oh Brendan,” he told him.

I had a principal in a new school i hadn't met yet because the first day of school at my new high school was my dad's funeral. He had no idea what I looked like, but he sought me out in the really crowded hallways and gave me a hug and his condolences. Never felt creepy, only cared about.

He went on to local politics and became our mayor. Only time I have truly voted for the best person for the job and not the least objectionable.

Edited to add: Wow! Thanks for the upvotes! I've never had a comment blow up like this.

Mr. Peary, if you see this, you earned my instant respect and kept it with your further actions. We need more like you.

In my first year of high school, my class decided to play a simple prank on our English/SOSE teacher, by all laughing when he faced the board, and then stopping every time he turned around to face us. After a few minutes of this, he just left the classroom without a word. We all sat there, confused, until a few minutes later the assistant principal comes in and explains that we've really upset our teacher; he made us believe we'd seriously fucked up...

Then our teacher walked in and pretty much went "gotcha!"
That son of a bitch had our respect from then on.

/u/TannedCroissant

The most badass part of this is him managing to get the vice principal in on it as well. Clearly he had his boss's respect too.

Mr Halpert: "Hey, Vice Principal Scott, could you err... give me a hand with something"

Vice Principal Scott: "Of course Mr Halpert, I'm a friend first, boss second..... probably entertainer third"

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link] x 2

I lay in bed that night and wept -
A teenage boy who barely slept,
But thought of how we made him feel -
A thought that lacked the pure appeal
It had some meagre hours before
When then I'd grinned with glee and more
To see his frowning face appear -
A face that held such doubt and fear
And grief and gloom and pain and woe,
With eyes that slowly turned below.

I wiped away a single tear.

He whispered "... gotcha" in my ear.

What everyone else has said. Plus this weird phenomenon: It can feel lonely, and suddenly a friend or family calls. You get a little perked up speaking to someone. Then in about 5 minutes you can't wait to get off the phone and join your own solitude again.

/u/yeezytaughtme222

As someone who lives alone the solitude is everything for me. Also being able to do whatever you want and not have to explain yourself to anyone.

/u/catls234

I love that I don't have to coordinate with anyone when I want to do something. Want to sip coffee on the couch for 3 hours on the weekend in pajamas before I go run my errands? Fine! Falling asleep during a movie and want to go to bed and watch the rest later (or not if it was meh)? There's no negotiation! Want cereal for dinner bc I'm too tired/lazy to cook? Not gonna hear any complaints! I love living alone.

/u/yeezytaughtme222

Those who can make you believe absurdities, can make you commit atrocities.

It starts with a lie,
just a little one first -
It starts with a lie
and you hear it rehearsed -
But nobody really believes that it's true - Apart from the others -

the people who do.

And so you attempt at a reasoned reply -
A factual basis to counter the lie -
You show them the truth that you're willing to share -
But that's when you learn that they don't really care.

The lie was just better.
They hoped it was true.
Because, what it told them,
they already knew.
They knew it inside them and now they were proud -

That someone had finally said it aloud.

An original Gameboy. I cut lawns for a summer to save up for it.

/u/ofbalance

Excellent. In '84, age 14, I worked 5-9pm Monday-Friday in our local video shop for a year to buy a Sony Walkman WM-22.

I still have it. Finding it in a box in the loft this morning prompted my question.

/u/ButternutSasquatch

For me, it was an N64. Took about 16 weeks of doing my newspaper route.

Totally worth it. I still have mine as well.

Ayy same with the paper route except bought a GameCube. Still have it today

And in the wind and rain and snow,
He frowned and turned his face below,
He gripped the bag inside his hand,
And stopped his bike and kicked the stand,
And picked a paper out and stared -
He turned with dark dismay, despaired,
And cursed before the morning moon.

He dreamt his dreams and whispered: "... soon."

Isaac Wilson, founding father of my home town, Middlesbrough, UK. He was a teetotaler and proponent of alcohol prohibition. Today he is only remembered because there is a pub in town named after him.

/u/ineedapostrophes

These days, Middlesbrough is like a living breathing advert for alcohol prohibition in itself. In Saltaire, near Bradford, there's a bar called 'Don't Tell Titus', because the village was created by Titus Salt for his mill workers, and he strictly banned 'beershops' there.

/u/Hellasummat

English pub names are the absolute best.

/u/IBelieveIHadThat

Not in England, but in Dublin there is an old historic pub called "The Bleeding Horse". I always thought it was a newer place that they gave an old ironic name to but it's actually 300+ yrs old. The website says this about the name: "There are (at least) two explanations for the name. One is that when a horse got the 'staggers' it was bled by a farrier at the inn. Another is that the name of the pub comes from an incident during the Battle of Rathmines in 1649, when a wounded horse fled from the battle.”

“Come gather round the embers now,
For I’ve a tale for thee -
The song, the ode, the story how
The lemon came to be.

”’twas on a frozen winter’s night
A hundred years ago -
The silver stars were burning bright,
The wind began to blow.

“And in this darkest shade of eves,
There stood a single tree -
A single branch devoid of leaves -
But not of life, you see.

“For there remained a lonely spark
Of something growing still -
A faded shade which split the dark -
A lemon there until -

“A furry creature slowly climbed
The flaking bark terrain -
A prowling tiny monkey primed
To reap the paltry gain.

“And yet, it longed to still declare
Its love to see the loot -
The lemon really didn't care.
For it was only fruit.

“My friends, to end this tale of woe:
Before it got to morn -

The monkey fucked the lemon, yo.

The hairy fruit was born.”

1. It is not cute or sweet to have an obese pet. It can cause joint issues and heart disease among many things. Stop showing love through over feeding (especially human junk food).
2. Dogs are living creatures who need preventative medical care just like you do. And sometimes they get sick like you do. If you can't contribute the bare minimum to take care of them, maybe you should think again about owning one.

From my former vet tech girlfriend, don’t leave your pets to be euthanized without you. It’s hard to be there and it’s hard to watch, but if you leave them they will die scared and looking for you. She had to try and comfort pets whose owner's couldn't bring themselves to stay and it's one of the few things that makes her cry.

Edit: As a caveat, if you can't keep yourself relatively calm and just can't handle being there it's overall best to stay out and not distress them. From all I know of vets and techs they will do everything in their power to comfort your pet. The same goes for those who are limited by Covid restrictions. You've given your best effort and you shouldn't beat yourself up over it. In the end you've done right by your pets.

/u/The_Fat_Man_Jams

I know from more than one experience just how hard it is, but how can you dessert them in their final moments?

/u/The-one-true-hobbit

Too many people do. I haven't had to do it yet, but it's part of being a pet owner. You have to accept the hard times or you shouldn't have a pet.

/u/iamthe0ther0ne

Even when it's time to let them go, so many pet owners keep making their pets suffer in sickness because "I couldn't live without her." It's about doing what's right for that animal that has loved and trusted you it's entire life, not about what you want.

Though I know you'll be alone -
Will not like it on your own -
Do not want to stay and see -
Need my head upon your knee -

Though I know you'll dream of this -
Think of all the things you'll miss -
How you held me close at night -
How I helped you feel all right -

Though I know you'll want your friend -
Do not want to face the end -
This is friendship too, you know?

Time to do it.

Let me go.

/u/Octopus_420

If anything the school day should be shorter. Or keep it 8 hours in the building, but leave 2 or 3 of those for students to work on homework with a teacher around when they need help/guidance or just for them to socialize in a somewhat structured way.

Expecting kids/teens to maintain any level of engagement and discipline for 8 hours straight is psychotic. It's a system built by nerds and sadists.

All the tiny crumbs around him
Slowly slipped and rolled and found him -
Turned and curled and twirled before him -
Neared as though they might explore him.

Crispy, crusty bits of bacon,
Cake for which he'd once been achin',
Chips which fell beneath his crunchers,
Snacks which somehow missed his munchers.

There he'd caught them,
couldn't quit him,
Fixed the only belt that fit him,
Crafted mass with things to span it -

Made himself into a planet.

#3464 – People who lived in the 50s-60s (or earlier or later!) Was the food actually... Good? Or was it as bad as it looks?

I was listening to an NPR piece while driving one day a few years ago about nutrition in the 40'/50's (can't find it now, of course) and they were talking about school lunches. The thing that struck me as memorable is how they talked about avoiding "exotic" ingredients because they might lead to behavioral difficulties. Exotic ingredients like ... garlic.

So I think we might take for granted how many "exotic" foods have become commonplace and that older generations never experienced them let alone developed a taste for them. Like, is there any grocery store that doesn't sell salsa?

/u/make_onions_cry

we might take for granted how many "exotic" foods have become commonplace

My Scandinavian grandma would proudly serve "fruit salad" which was just canned fruit cocktail with whipped cream.

I always quietly thought this was cheap and sad until my mom explained out incredibly avant-garde this was for someone born in the 1920s.

My grandma, lover of exotic fruits, would use her early telephone with a three digit phone number to arrange special imports of rare and exotic treats like fresh grapefruits. Eventually, she would be able to procure fruit all the way from America! Obviously it had to be canned and not fresh, but at the time you'd have to visit a library to see as much as a picture of a papaya.

I appreciated it much more after that.

/u/-Tolv-

This was a commonplace dessert when I grew up in Norway in the 1980s. Probably because my dad's parents were born in 1919.

My dad's older brother (78) still remember the first time he had a banana. He hated it. Nobody had told him he needed to peel it first.

Cosmopolitan, the magazine. As a teenager I read one my GF had in math class once, and for some reason just kept reading them. For 10 years, TEN YEARS, I bought it every month. When I was deployed I had my wife buy it and send me a copy each month.

On my bookshelf, I have them all lined up, because if you have an entire year of cosmo, the spine of the magazine actually has a guy on it. Its usually their “hot guy of the year” or whatever you call it.

WELL IN 2019, COSMO DECIDED FUCK THAT.

And they GOT RID OF THE GUY ON THE SPINE.

I can't tell you guys how much satisfaction I got when I finished a year out and could see the whole guy. Its really dumb because I'm straight, and I don't really care about it beyond like, knowing I finished something.

But Cosmo got rid of the guy and I haven't bought another issue since. I really cannot stress how deeply upset I was about this.

/u/sezah

Our elementary school was heavy into unicycles. Gym class year round was learning to ride, then ride together, and in formation.

I was one of the unlucky few who never got it (I can’t dance or ride a bike either, so I suspect there’s some balance issues). School all but threatened to hold me back a year until I learned how. Everyone forgot and never picked it up again as soon as they moved to middle school.

Worst part is that we were a very poor school in a very rural area without much funding. I can’t imagine how much the school spent on those unicycles. There was no sponsorship, and we weren’t competing in anything.

Edit: This was in a public school in western Washington State in the late ‘80s. But I think some other schools nearby did this too.

Nearby high school is Mt. Si HS aka the actual Twin Peaks HS. Not even remotely kidding.

/u/Oberon_Swanson

The idea of some small village where everyone rides around on unicycles and has no idea it's not normal feels like something out of a quirky rpg lmao. Sorry you had to go through that it must have been so kafkaesque

/u/TannedCroissant

Would make sense in an isolated village. If there's no outside influence then from one generation of teachers to the next, they'll misguidedly keep forcing each and every student to ride a one wheeler. It's a dangerous cycle.

I am the blue beyond the sky.
The shadow shade of night.
The softest sparkle in your eye.
The morning glare of light.

I am the rhymes that ride the tide.
The swing, the sound, the beat.
The lines that swell and slip and slide

In stanzas, small and sweet.

I am the secret silver seams
That weave inside your mind.
I am the lost and tender dreams
You dared to leave behind.

I am the coin you cannot earn.
The knot you can't untwist.
The thing in class you couldn't learn,
And so in time dismissed.

I am the storm.

Spooky cement tunnel that seems to lead underground. Very dark and echoes go on for ages. We had no clue what it was, didn't seem to be any kind of drainage tunnel because it was square/bone dry and out in an open field. There are definitely some old bomb shelters and missile silos on our area that are out of commission, so we decided to take a look. /u/bebeJuan

/u/Saxsquatch365

I was taking a look at some of those massive smokestacks in an abandoned factory and I heard a radio squelch
That’s time to go, right there

/u/GitEmSteveDave

Used to do security at a race track at night and I’d usually hit the “monitor” button on my radio, which turns off the squelch so you can listen to the channel unfiltered or pretty much pure static, every so often so people would know I was nearby and I wouldn’t have to deal with them, unless they were supposed to be there.

/u/rusty_L_shackleford

I worked night security at a cemetery. And this is spot on. I tried to make sure my presence was obvious. Shining the flashlight around, jingling the keys, fiddling with the radio, slam the car door when I got out, etc. The last thing I wanted to do was surprise someone. If they see me coming and scam, well that’s what I wanted anyway. And no one ever reacts well to being suddenly cornered. I’m not a cop, I don’t have a weapon, I’m not getting hurt over someone else’s stuff. I’m here to observe, report and politely enforce the rules.

Edit: To address why a cemetery needs security:

1) It was government owned and considered a secured facility. Not gonna unpack that one anymore as it would make it very easy to figure out exactly where and I'm not doxxing my self like that for imaginary internet points

2) This was a large working cemetery with multiple burials a day. Lots of high value equipment on site, mowers, lawn and landscaping equipment, tractors, excavators, vehicles etc. There had been thefts in the past.

3) They we're very big on preventing potential vandalism, or just people trashing the place looking for somewhere to drink or what have you.

I didn't know that job existed either before I got into it. I fell into it by accident. An friend recruited me into when they found themselves suddenly short staffed.

/u/Terradactyl87

Language. If it's every language, it means I could speak dead languages and translate some of the oldest texts in the world. That would be super cool.

/u/nekomata01

It only says you could speak them, I don't think you could read the languages, so you wouldn't be able to translate

/u/GryphonHall

By speaking them, it would make it relatively easy to then translate them, even if it meant with help from others.
Edit - I've gotten several replies about being wrong. (You can't translate Chinese by speaking it) That's where the help of others comes in. Cuneiform was translated 150 years ago. Translations are also done through problem-solving. That's how the Zodiac Killer's message was translated. By being able to speak a language, it would infer the proper cadence and order that abstract characters are occurring. That alone would be huge for translation.

/u/red_tupperware

i heard the word “lesbian” for the first time at camp when i was 8, and when i asked what it meant i was told that it was “a girl who sleeps in a bed with other girls.” i took that to heart and understood the word as a negative, so i was pretty uncomfortable with sharing beds at sleepovers for a while.

also, when she was little, someone i went to high school with believed that a woman became pregnant when a married couple put forth a formal Wish to God for a baby. after a long time of begging her parents to give her a new sibling, they gave her the good news. she didn't believe them, and made them wish out loud in front of her for a baby. her mom had twins and she thought it was her fault for making them wish a second time.

Tourism and recreation aren't the only reasons people fly. Airlines also transport organs, vaccines, and other medical supplies. Additionally, people fly for work, and it isn't an airport or an airlines place to say what is a valid reason to fly and what isn't. Shutting down airports would require a lot of coordination and cooperation that doesn't seem present in today's political climate.

/u/Hunterofshadows

To expand on this, people don't realize that airlines actually have really narrow profit margins.

Unless everyone needing to fly for essential reasons wants to shell out for a private plane, shutting down non essential travel means shutting down airports period

Edit: fucking hell, I don't check this site fir a couple hours and this is what I come back to ...

At the risk of sounding like an ass, I'd like to make three quick points.

1) a lot of you are acting like you know the solution to the current problem. I'd like to remind anyone reading this that you don't know what experience a given redditor actually has so take it all with a grain of salt

2) this is a complicated problem with no quick and easy solution

3) to illustrate point one, I'd like to give you my experience on the topic of discussion: I've read one article on the topic like 5 years ago.

Edit: okay one more thing then I'm going to ignore this clusterfuck.

The aviation industry is not all tourism. A healthy portion of the food in your house is there because of aviation. You can't just turn off one of the keystones of modern society and infrastructure

/u/texag51

Airline company profits are far from being small, so pointing to narrow margins is quite disingenuous and paints a false picture of what's actually going on.

Over the last ten years, domestic airline companies have spent an eye-watering $47 billion in stock buybacks.

These airline companies aren't reinvesting the profits back into the company, improving services, infrastructure, or systems...

Nor are they saving the money in case of disruption in service.

Airline companies were, however, working aggressively to increase their shareholder value.

If their margins were so slim, airline companies should have invested that money into improving them. Now that they're caught in a pandemic, airline companies are lobbying for $50 billion in assistance to stay afloat..oddly the same amount of profits they've made for the last ten years and spent on stock buyback schemes.

#3445 – How much time needs to pass before grave robbing turns into archaeology?

/u/EnailaRed

There's also a methodology component to it. Regardless of the age of the remains, if I womble up with a metal detector, dig a hole and yoink out anything of value - that's grave robbing. If I fight for months for planning approval, record every detail of the site in obsessive detail, then refill any holes carefully when the funding has run out even though there's still more to discover - that's archaeology.

Plus archeology's not just graves!

Happy New Year! This is a megathread to discuss everything related to New Year's Eve celebrations, the coming of the New Year, and the downfall of 2020.

All top level comments to this post should be questions surrounding the topic of the New Year.

The purpose of this megathread is to contain all of the New Year topics in order to cut down on all the New Year posts we will get. While this thread is up, all other New Year posts will be removed.

One of my favorite surgeons is very quiet. Story told about him by another surgeon when he was a resident. Resident kept trying to ask about his kids, his holidays, making chit-chat. Surgeon says, “I’m comfortable with uncomfortable silences.” End of conversation.

/u/hicd

One of my favorite coworkers was a guy that was equally comfortable sitting the next desk over in total silence for 4-6 hours at a time on the nights we worked together. It was so nice, going in knowing I wouldn’t have to spend 15 minutes every hour or two trying to make small talk. Sad day when he left, I hope it wasn’t because I asked him if he wanted anything from the snack rack that one time.

I was in a long relationship with someone who could not stand silence and would never stop talking. This resulted in a complete breakdown of communication because what was being said was always filler and never quality. I speak when there's something to say and expect to be listened to. Some people speak as a performance and don't understand why others don't perform the same way. When there's constant talking, information is not exchanged because talking just becomes constant empty noise.

/u/implodemode

Hard work can pay off in the same way you can't win the lottery unless you play. But you also need luck - to be in the right place at the right time with the right skills. My husband and I have worked hard at a number of things. Some worked. Some worked temporarily and some did not work. And then our son came along and took what we started and worked hard and increased it. But there are never guarantees. But if you don't work hard, your chances of success are pretty small.

/u/AlreadyOlder

Luck = hard work meeting opportunity

/u/KalashnikittyApprove

Yeah, though both hard work and opportunity are obviously variable. A guy I went to uni with graduated into his mother's extremely successful business. I'm not saying he didn't work hard, but I doubt he'd been able to be as successful as he was without it being handed in a silver platter. In a way, hard work wasn't even a requirement for his luck because he had the opportunity one way or another, while the rest of us graduated into a recession.

This sounds bitter but it's not. I absolutely agree that hard work is usually a big part of success, but that narrative too often neglects how much of a head start certain people have and allows them to frame it as a personal achievement when it's not.

/u/Zhoenish

Being given tons of money and connections is the other way, of course.

/u/EatATaco

There's more than 1 way to skin a cat.

However, the reality is that if it isn't going to get handed to you, your best bet is almost certainly going to require hard work. In almost zero situations is hard work going to work against you.

/u/Jewnadian

Sure, but you see how far we've come from 'Hard work pays off' as an explanation for success to now 'I guess hard work won't hurt your chances anyway'?

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#) 6 × 1

You won't always,
don't always
get what you need -
And try as you will,
you won't always succeed -
And sometimes you'll struggle,
and sometimes you'll doubt -
And sometimes you'll work,
but it just won't work out.

It's toil and it's trouble,
this troubling life -
It's juggling stress,
and it's struggle and strife -
It's bearing the bad times,
and riding the rough -
It's knowing you tried,
but it wasn't enough.

But try all the same,
with a hope in your heart -
Be firm and determined, and ready to start -
'Cause sometimes it's luck that it takes to get through -

But sometimes it's effort.

And that's up to you.

So a little over two years ago I dropped out of college due to financial issues. I was a shell of myself for a while after that, felt like a complete failure. I had been going to school for automation and robotics technology. I moved back in with my dad and took a job making disk blades for farm equipment.

When I went to college part of why I chose what I did was that I didn't want to do heavily manual labor, I left that to move 30 tons of steel by hand each night.

I didn't really hate the job, it was nice to see the product I made in the fields all around, there were actually some blades made in that plant sitting outside my dad's garage though they were probably made 30 years before I worked there. I took pride in my work but I hated my life, my manager would ask me nightly when I was going back to school, he would tell me that I could do a lot better than I was. It really dug into me, I contemplated suicide a lot during that time.

After working there for almost a year massive flooding in the Midwest coupled with a trade war with China had us only able to work every other week. That wasn't working for me so I decided to put in an application to work for a major window production company that I had interviewed for an internship with while in college, they hired me on for production. During the interview I had told them about my college experiences and that I had interviewed with the company previously for a position in another plant, I also told them I was interested in working maintenance.

A couple months after starting that job a maintenance position opened up and HR practically harassed me into applying. I ended up getting the job. Its not uncommon for people in the program I was in to end up working maintenance so it was a major success for me.

Things were definitely turning around. I started that job in January of this year. A few months later we had a new machine coming from our main plant which is close to the college I attended. I recognized one of the guys who came to help set it up, he was in college with me. I went and talked to him and it was great to catch up. The best part was seeing that I was in the same position as someone who had completed the program. That was when I realized how far I had come from when I dropped out. I was not a failure, despite everything I was succeeding, the odds were not in my favor and I was pulling through.

Fast forward to this last September, two years to the day since I dropped out, one week after my birthday. My job started sending me back to school, paying me to go to class. That was the day it really hit me, I was exactly where I belonged. This is what I have wanted for so long, this is my dream job. I make great money, I love the work I do, the company I work for is great to it's employees. This is it, I can't put to words how lucky I am. So many people search their whole lives and never find a place where they fit in like this.

This is not the first time I have typed this out but every time it brings tears to my eyes. I don't know many people that are as happy with their lives as I am and I just feel so lucky.

I feel your luck lies in walking such a crooked path that you ended up at the door of gratitude. Millions of people graduate into their dream jobs and end up hating it. Life threw you a lifeline: it showed you other options before finally landing you back where you first were. Your life sounds like a romcom but instead of a prince you got the job :)

It took several years to conceive our son. By the time he was 3 year old, we had tried many times with medical assistance for a second. We have up and started an adoption.

Well, after we got all the paperwork together and sent off to China, we found out my wife was expecting. Ok, we can deal with that. As my wife put it, “What’s the worst that could happen?”

But the ultrasound showed that it was twins.

So my kids are 18, 14, 14 and 14 now.

It’s not what we would have ever planned, but I wouldn’t trade it for anything.

/u/silent_shivers

My cousins also struggled with infertility for several years and started fostering a baby boy in September with plans to adopt him in a few months. One week after they got the foster baby, they found out they’re pregnant.

In April they’ll be welcoming a daughter and they’ll be eligible to adopt their baby boy. It’s amazing how these things work out sometimes.

It's amazing how these things work out sometimes.

We arrived here unrelated -
We were made a life apart -
But perhaps we only waited
For our family to start.

I was born and raised to others
With another life before -
And perhaps I've sisters, brothers,
But perhaps you've room for more.

See I might have lived in sorrow,
Only lonely, all I knew -

But you gave me my tomorrow.

And I'm spending it with you.

Oh my gosh I love this! When we were younger, my parents had a tradition with us. We would always go out into the front yard with my dad to find the “perfect” pine cone. Maybe a week or two before Christmas, we planted the pine cone in a pot and watered it. Then overnight, it would become this magnificent, huge (to my young eyes), and fully decorated Christmas tree. It only worked in December and we were always told it was the Christmas magic. Then my sister and I figured it out when we found pine needles in my parents’ car haha

A tradition we had when I was a child, and one I'll be continuing with my children when I have them, is the Christmas Eve box. For Christmas Eve, we were given one gift early, and it was a box with Christmas pajamas, a mug, hot chocolate mix, popcorn, and a Christmas movie. We would get to open it around lunchtime, and we'd spend the rest of the evening in our new jammies having cocoa and movies together.

“Ode to Jammies”

When the world has left me weary -

When I'm gloomy, tired and teary,
When I'm broken,

When I need a little caring -
When I want a little light -
For the moments spent repairing
Every problem,
every plight -

Yeah, for me it wasn't really ghosts inside my closet that would rattle my mirrored closet doors. I met my wife in college and when we were dating she often mentioned that when she was a kid she had a play doctor's kit that was stolen from her house. She had some surgeries really young and so her parents bought it for her to demystify the doctors office. She'd use it all the time on her dad poking and prodding him.

One day I asked her about the robbery. Did they take everything? Jewelry? The TV? Other valuables? No, no, and no. It hit me.

I asked "so, someone broke into your house and only stole your doctor's kit, leaving anything worth fencing there?"

"Yeah, why?"

"Did you ever consider your folks were tired of you using the kit on them all the time after you got better?"

“Oh, damn.”

We confirmed it with her Dad later but for 15 years she had believed some thief broke in and ONLY stole her beloved doctor’s kit.

#3418 – What is the single most “you’ll understand it when you’re older” thing?

2020-12-12 20:02:14

/u/dickdockdack

/u/henrysmagent

A parent’s love for their child.

A year after my granddaughter was born my daughter was telling me how wonderful her toddler is, how smart she is, and just all around lovable she is. She then said “I don’t think I could ever love anyone as much as I love my daughter!”

Then she paused for a moment as realization washed over her face.

“Dad, is this how much you love me?”

“Bingo, kiddo. Now you know.”

/u/Reamund

And how the opposite is true for those who had abusive parents.

I read something once that really stuck with me: people with loving parents realize how much their parents loved them once they have their own children; people with abusive parents realize just how cruel and fucked up their own childhood was and struggle with the realization that their parents could be that cruel to a child once they have their own kids. You rationalize the abuse away for years, then you catch a glimpse of how truly vulnerable and innocent you were as a child and it’s a whole new perspective on your experience.

If you’re one of those kids with abusive parents, becoming a parent yourself can really set you back, even if you feel like you’ve dealt with your demons.

If you can place another life before you -
If you can pledge you'll never look to part -
For just the trust of those who just adore you -
For just the love that waits inside a heart -

If you can say you'll always try intently -
If you can hope you'll hold them safe and strong -
For just the care of those you're holding gently -
And even when it seems it's going wrong -

If you can swear you'll never just discard them -
And always know inside your mind you won't -
Then raise a child, and love, protect, and guard them -

But if you can't -
but if you can't - then don't.

When I was a kid my dad and I had a tradition every week of going to the video store and renting a movie or two to watch together. It was one of my favorite things to do, but I remember I used to get really upset at him because every single time we'd actually start to watch the movie he would fall asleep.

It wasn't until I was older that I realized that the reason he would fall asleep was because he was exhausted from working two very physically demanding jobs to try and give me the best life he possibly could. On top of that, even though he was tired he still made an effort to try and start a little tradition with me and spend time with me. Those memories of me having to nudge my dad awake are so great in my eyes, because they made me realize what a caring and hard working man he was and still is.

Edit: Just wanted to add that my dad and I have kept our tradition going in a way, by watching a movie together every month or so. We used to go to the theaters, but obviously Covid has complicated that, so we settle for just watching something together on the couch. We did manage to get a theater to ourselves for his birthday this year, here is a selfie of the two of us outside of the theater.

He still falls asleep sometimes but i don't mind at all, he deserves it.

#3414 – Teachers of reddit, what student will you never forget?

2020-12-08 19:47:06

/u/Jade-Spade

/u/dmxrob

I taught math to 5th-8th graders. Had a student who did very well, always pleasant, helped others, etc. I began to think about him more when I noticed a pattern in the clothes he wore. The clothes were nice, basic, and clean - so I really just shrugged it off.

It had just turned into the holiday season that year, about a week or so before Thanksgiving, and one evening I had to run back to the school to pick up my car as I had went out with some fellow instructors. As I was preparing to leave I noticed activity near the dumpsters and saw him digging through them pulling out food scraps from the cafeteria. My heart sank about 1000 feet. I didn't know what to do - if I were to go up to him, he'd know I knew and I just didn't know how he would react.

I talked with a colleague of mine who knew a social worker. The family had suffered the loss of his dad about two years ago, and now his mom was battling cancer. To say they were hanging on by a thread would be an understatement. But the kid hid this from everyone as far as we knew.

Finally, we knew we had to do something. So we all waited one evening and sure enough, he returned. He was scared, ashamed, crying, angry - every emotion you can think of. I do not blame him. We took him to his home and his mom was emotional too. We ordered hot food and a colleague went and got it, and we all spent many hours that evening talking and reassuring them we were there to help.

Working with local resources, we got them the help they needed. Food, medical assistance, even local volunteers to come help with some chores around their house.

The mom got better thankfully, and the bright young man continued to do well in school and got a scholarship for college when he graduated a few years later.

This was 20 years ago – today, that bright young man works as a mechanical engineer and is still as generous and considerate as ever. His mother, sadly, passed on around 10 years ago. All 3 of his “former teachers” from that night went to the funeral.

I am very proud of him. We still keep in touch, and visit often.

Dammit, got me right in the feels.

I see you,
working hard your way,
And striving still to smile -
With soul enough to face the day,
Though hungry all the while.

If you were someone else's boy -
If lives were mine to trade -
I'd sit and watch your days with joy,
For who you might have made.

Perhaps you might have found a way
To show the world your worth -
Perhaps you might have had your say -
Perhaps you'd change the Earth.

Perhaps your fame would travel far -
You'd hold the globe enthralled -
The magnitude of who you are Forevermore recalled.

Perhaps in some divergent year,
Your time will come to be.

Perhaps that time and place is here.

Perhaps it's up to me.

I turned 6 months into 3 years of juvie time. While not really bad, this one kid supposedly fell in the shower and hit his head. Not sure if it was a planned ruse, but after he came back from the hospital he suddenly forgot how to talk and lost his memory. He'd communicate with whimpers. This went on for a few weeks. Every month you'd go in for evaluation and your remaining time and your progress would be reviewed. I'm assuming he thought this act would get him sent home. The staff eventually grew tired of it and in his review, told him since he didn't remember anything than he'd have to do all off his time again because he obviously hadn't learned anything to be rehabilitated. His memory miraculously returned that day.

I was a prison guard, briefly, at an all male prison in Virginia. It didn't suit me. I don't have enough testosterone, I guess. I just didn't like the entire process. I also couldn't get used to walking around, on my own with 180 men when I did rounds. The men were loose just walking around watching. The stares were penetrating. If any of those guys grabbed me, I had no gun, no mace, nothing, and Virginia prisons will never negotiate with prisoners for the sake of a hostage. I'd have been screwed. It messes with your head a bit, but I still did it.

Yeah, the food's gross, but the place was clean. The worst day for me was when one of the guards blew his brains out in the watchtower. He was in his early 20s.

/u/jonnygreen22

sounds shit, you know you could have done that same job in the UK, Australia, Canada, new zealand, or like many european countries and you would probably still be there now. Because in the rest of the world, workers have at least SOME rights, man i'm just upset about your story, this is bullshit you guys are supposed to be the world leaders man what happened man.

Right now in aus we're looking for prison guards where i am. Usual pay is like 50-60 grand a year. 6 weeks annual leave. Overtime available. I've been there and 90 percent of what they do is drink coffee and talk shit to each other.

What happened? What happened was 45 years ago, we had an ethical midget of a man as our head of state who got caught with his hand in the cookie jar and stepped down rather than face a trial. His two successors were largely ineffectual, and then came a glib Hollywood actor whose main accomplishments in office were union busting, ignoring the AIDS crisis, and convincing the populace that a financial policy based on the rich getting richer was good for everyone. Fast forward 40 years, and the food production has been consolidated by multibillion-dollar corporations, most social progress is stymied by politicians who pay lip service to the rules they found in a 2,000-year-old fictional book, most of our taxes go to a bloated military, our so-called leaders are beholden to corporations who fund their re-election campaigns, most people believe not joining a union is actually a good thing (so-called "right to work"). Don't even get me started on the healthcare system because after ten minutes and barely scratching the surface, you'll think I've gone insane, that there's no way what I'm saying is true.

Into this clusterfuck, inject a man who some call a "con man" or "reality show star" but really represents the worst of this country, who was unnaturally gifted at playing up the worst instincts and fears of half the populace, whose goals have been debated ad nauseum, but really came down to wanting to undo the legacy of the guy before him whose mistake was openly mocking him while he was a guest at a dinner for fancy people. Oh, and he's spent the last four years doing a slow shred of the sacred document that laid down the rules for this country.

So home ownership is out of reach for most people, jobs are disappearing at an alarming rate, the cost of living is skyrocketing, our education system is underfunded, while higher education is good but its graduates are overburdened by loans they spend a majority of their professional lives trying to pay back, a hospital trip potentially bankrupts most families, and employers provide little to no time off, even for pregnancies and birth. And the greatest trick the devil ever pulled was convincing half the populace to ignore their failing leadership on fiscal policy by convincing them to follow their leadership on social issues that are largely none of our business, such as gay marriage, abortion, and whether people pray in a public place.

On the other hand, we still produce the best music and movies in the world, so there's that.

16 year old me had my mother convinced I wet my bed because I jacked off 6 times in an afternoon, became convinced I broke my dick, so I jacked off a 7th time just to make sure it still worked.

We had no AC, so I was beating off in my room/a finished attic in August and drenched my sheets. She came out of the laundry room asking if I was ok and why there was so much pee on my bedsheets. I told her it was sweat, and she never washed my clothes again.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link] × 2

Still those sordid thoughts disgrace me:

There she turned the sheets to face me,
Whereupon I saw a faded
Shadow form of me was shaded.

There my imprint lay and sweetly
Plainly bore my actions neatly.
There the shape of me was waiting -

There, in essence, masturbating.

How we stood unbroken, boundless,
Neither split the silence, soundless -
Not a single word was uttered.

“Let’s agree it’s sweat,” she muttered.

My younger brother died from a drug overdose last month. He used for the first time in march. In 7 short months I watched my best friend become someone I didn't recognize, someone I couldn't even hold a conversation with anymore. It wasn't a slow deterioration, it was a meteoric descent into a drug fuelled madness. He lied about anything and everything, even things that made zero sense to lie about, used nicknames from our childhood that we hadn't used in years, would forget what we were talking about mid-conversation. It was like he was replaced with a near identical but slightly off version of my brother. It was and still is heart breaking. I mourn him but at the end I didn't know him anymore.

Edit: so first and foremost I want to thank everyone for the kind words. It means a lot. This is the hardest time of my life and I know what loss is.

To answer some questions he was using fentanyl, not heroin or meth. We did not understand the severity of it until it was too late. In a lucid moment he told me he knew he was addicted by the 3rd time he used.

He came from a loving home but we lost our father in our teenage years and I believe he never dealt with it. It hung over him.

Edit2: seriously i wasnt expecting this response. I'm overwhelmed by the kindness. To put peoples minds at ease I have a very strong support network around me and plenty of people to talk to. I appreciate everything. I will be ok. As with all things I just need time. Thank you.

/u/Ashiro

Fucking hell this was painful. I've got 2 younger brothers and I feel like the mentally ill/drug fuelled older brother who's not good enough to be 'the older brother' cos I'm too unstable.

Though thankfully the drugs have been quit I'm not back mentally. I'm so, so sorry you had to go through that. If I could I'd give you a hug. I'm crying and I wanna hug the pain out of you.

Watched my grandfather slowly sink into Alzheimer's. By the end he didn't know my name or his own. He was sad and angry and confused. I watched every week as he forgot a little more. Got a little more belligerent. A little more lost. Until one day I walked in and he started screaming that someone was there to rob him. It was the saddest fucking thing I've ever seen.

I have such vivid memories of watching him and my uncles have such animated debates about politics and movies and sports. They used to play Risk until the sun came up listening to Sinatra. He would sit and explain every single play in a baseball game to me as a kid. He was sharp as fuck and the saddest and hardest part was watching the struggle on his face to remember. The frustration he felt. Like he was letting us down. I miss him a lot.

/u/HolyC4bbage

I remember my grandpa being the strongest person I've ever known. He survived world war 2, he was arrested by the nazis for refusing to fight for them, he escaped from concentration camps while watching his friends get gunned down around him.

He moved to Canada after the war with his wife and 5 kids. He didn't speak a word of English. No money, very few possessions. But he survived, because that's what he did. I used to sit and listen to his stories throughout my childhood and teen years. I moved away in 2006, but still managed to come back once or twice a year. Every time I saw him he was weaker and weaker. Eventually, he forgot who I was. He forgot who any of us were. The last time I saw him was at a family gathering at Christmas in 2009. A hollow shell of a man, eyes glazed over, hunched over in a wheelchair. The strongest man I've ever known.

He passed away on father's day, 2010, all of his children by his bedside.

Eventually, he forgot who I was. He forgot who any of us were.

If I should last to see the night
When all my thoughts are old -
I hope the string that holds them tight
Is safe, secure, and bold.

I do not want those secret seams
To fray; to free; to breach -
I do not want my dearest dreams
To lie beyond my reach.

I do not want the twilight knife
To cut and blind and blur -
I do not want to grasp at life,
And all the things that were.

For I could ride the end astride,
And face the finish, free -
As long as I'm the same inside.

As long as I'm still me.

I met a guy who had been travelling Australia with a couple friends, hitchhiking around as many of us had done. One of his friend told him they were near his distant uncles house, whom he'd never met before. He got a phone number from a family member and as they had hoped, the uncle offered them a place to stay. He picked them up in town and drove them out to his rural property way out in the bush. They said he seemed like a pretty normal guy, friendly and cheery. When it was time to set up a place to sleep the uncle took them to a closet that was totally full of sleeping bags and bed rolls. They didn't think much of it at the time and all grabbed a kit and set up on the living room floor. They stayed a couple days and nothing out of the ordinary happened, and afterwards the uncle drove them to the bus station and they continued on their way. About a year later that man was arrested and charged with several counts of murder. He was the man who was picking up young hitch hiking backpackers and slaughtering them. The guy who told me this story was 100% certain he had slept in the sleeping bag of one of his victims.

And later on if they'd come back to my place for the first time, "I'll be up in a second, just gotta let my roommate know where I went so she doesn't worry". It must've worked, because I didn't murder any of them.

Well the first sign probably should’ve been lil 4th grade me, after learning of the existence of gay people, laying there at night thinking, “aww man, gay girls are so lucky. Wish I could date a girl! Oh well, guess I’ll marry a man.”

Or the countless times groups of girls would be obsessing over how cute some dude was and I’d be standing there like ???

Or maybe the fantasies I had in 6th grade about me dating a girl I was friends with.

But for some reason I didn’t even begin to consider the possibility of not being straight until I got the most intense crush of my life (the kind that physically hurts because you want the other person so badly) on a friend of mine who was a girl. Hence the googling lol. Took me another two or three years to really accept it.

My folks have lived in a sleepy little town for about 30 years. Recently someone decided to turn one neighborhood house into a air b&b and its become a party house every weekend. Every single neighbor within earshot is fed up. The entire lot of annoyed permanent residents get up Saturday

#3384 – Deaf people of Reddit, what is the equivalent of having a song stuck in your head?

/u/Slimfin7

/u/savvygirl27

I've been deaf since I was two.
I always get clips of people dancing stuck in my head like the Carlton dance from Fresh Prince of Bel Air or dancing in the fountain from the Friends theme song.

/u/Demitrius

If I had to have a dance stuck in my head I think I would pick The Carlton.

/u/savvygirl27

It always makes me chuckle!

/u/RAT_CONDOM

If you haven't seen it, look up Will Smith's appearance on the Graham Norton show on Youtube. The Carlton makes a surprise return near the end, and better than ever.

/u/DragonEmperor

Its not much of a surprise now is it?

/u/TheMillenniumMan

If you haven't seen it, look up the movie Sixth Sense, it has a great twist at the end where it's revealed Bruce Willis was dead the whole time. It's gonna shock you when you watch it!

/u/SeeItSayItSorted

What does the Sixth Sense and the Titanic have in common?

Cause. If they behave differently than me. Then they are challenging the way I behave. Which I will not tolerate as I am perfect and my behavior reflects that. So, all should do exactly as all do in order to ensure perfection is maintained.

Taught instrumental music down in South Texas, so I basically never gave any sort of homework outside of practicing.

6th grade - gave the kiddos a super basic theory sheet to complete that was due back in two days since I had a dentist appointment the next day.

When I'm collecting the sheets, a trombone kid tells me "My grandma stole my homework in Mexico and wouldn't give it back."

Turns out they were visiting his grandparents over the border outside Matamoros and his grandma really wanted something of his to hang on her refrigerator, so she took the homework he had just finished and put it up. Kid protested, but she wouldn't relent, so he snapped a pic as proof.

Graded the sheet from the picture. Kid got an A. I got a story. EDIT: Thank you for the awards and kind words!! Hope this little story from the beautiful Rio Grande Valley brightened someone's day.

/u/spiggerish

I would teach my kids once or twice a week. The one day a kid comes in for their lesson. I ask them if they've been practicing? They assure me they have. I ask them very specific things about the piece and if they're POSITIVE they practiced it? "Yes sir. I did!!!" I say ok, take out your books. Lets see. They start rummaging in their bag. Cannot find the book. "I think I left my book at home". No problem. Use the copy that's on top of the piano. They grab it. It's their practice book. That they forgot there in the previous lesson. Oof.

#3368-3369 – People who asked for a pencil every single day in school. How is life going for you?
2020-10-29 17:15:09

/u/ChazMagnum

/u/MyNameIsZa2

So back in grade 3 by the middle of the year, every classmate in my class of around 28 of us was asking for a pencil every other day or 3 because they would randomly go missing. Fast forward a bit and our teacher was making us do the bi-monthly desk cleaning. As we empty out our desks of books and forgotten assignments, a nearby classmate sets their pencil case on top of their desk with a large thud. Some of us look and gaze upon a pencil case like no other.

Now, this pencil case was your standard 6x10 inch rectangle, but it was packed so full of pencils that it was a solid cylinder. We started making a scene and the teacher came over to see what was amiss. What followed was the emptying of the pencil case in which the whole class re-discovered their pencils from the past few months.
Fuckin' Michael, hoarding everyone's pencils.

/u/CanuckBacon

I knew a guy in high school that would say "Oh there's my pencil" anytime he'd see a pencil that someone didn't actively have next to them. Then he'd put it in his pencil case and go on with his life. Very few people caught on because he was just so casual about it. I'd ask to borrow a pencil almost any time I saw him do it and he'd just as casually take one out, hand it to me and say "Don't forget to give it back". I never did.

We both knew what the other was up to but we found it funny to play along. We became best friends and cycled across Canada for charity together a few years ago.

/u/IanRCarter

Have either of you ever mentioned it since then?

/u/CanuckBacon

It's been several years since high school so I'd mostly forgotten about it until this post. We actually have a couple random things we do.

One day grade 12 we were walking from the school to his house and in a park we saw a broken telescope, I naturally picked it up and brought it back to his house where I left it. A week later it shows up on my doorstep with an envelope. He used some really fancy/old-timey language that basically said "Please accept this humble gift".

So we started exchanging it back and forth every so often, leaving a note. We even agreed in our letters never to talk about the telescope in front of each other. We also use pen names for it. One day he actually gave it to me all wrapped up for a celebration for me and said “Please give this to <pen name>”, everyone else was very confused and asked what was in it but neither of us broke.

It’s been a while since we’d exchanged it. The problem is that because we leave it at the front door it can be hours before it’s discovered, so there’s the worry that there might be thieves or something. It could just be that my friend is playing the long game. Since there’s no way to ask, I just have to assume that he’s still got it and is biding his time.

#3365 – People who are ghosting other people, have you ever been called out, if so, how did that make you feel?

2020-10-27 20:53:28

/u/till-mann

/u/ChunkySorbet

I was recently ghosted by a guy I'd been seeing. He actually reached out and apologized after a while, so that was nice of him, but it doesn't take away how much it hurt.

My way of thinking is if someone ghosts you, let the dead rest. No point in chasing after someone who doesn't want to be chased.

/u/Jesje_Jk

I was low-key dating/hanging out with this guy that started ghosting me. After a while I texted and just asked him to honestly tell me what was up. He explained in great detail that he met someone else and had fallen hard for her. He apologized sincerely for being a dick by ghosting and I actually really appreciated some brutal honesty for once. I've dated so many assholes that would lie about everything or gaslight me that I always prefer the harshest truth now.

/u/abolish_karma

I did the "Is everything okay? Are you tired of hanging out with people or atr you just tired of hanging out with me? " And got a very decent "last one, I'm really bad at this" back. I felt better for having that cleared up and we weren't super long term material anyway.

/u/Kiwi_Koalla

I just got ghosted by someone I've been seeing pretty regularly since August and it sucks. I asked straight up "hey, you've been silent for a while, is everything ok?" After a week of no response and still haven't heard back.

The disrespect is palpable.

EDIT: Holy crap this blew up!

Some additional details: we weren't exclusive, it was a mutual agreement that we just wanted to be friends with benefits, but we were really friends. We'd hang out and get meals together and watch shows before hooking up.

I had invited him (in a friend capacity) to a small gathering taking place at the end of this month, and he agreed to go. We hung out again after that, watched a movie, and he went home since we both had a "no sleepover" policy. My policy isn't as strict if it's been a few weeks, but I didn't wanna push him.

He's definitely got an avoidant personality type, but I didn't expect that to become an issue, since we weren't getting romantic and I wasn't interested in starting a relationship anyway.

After that night he stopped responding. I'd sent him a few Snapchats (nothing crazy, mostly jokes and memes) and after a week I texted asking if everything was ok. That was one week ago. I kept getting left on read so I'm just gonna let ghosts stay dead. Even if he were to reach out at this point, I'm annoyed enough at his behavior and I've got too much respect for myself to try building a friendship with him again.

When Little Timmy took his phone,
And saw the message there -
He said, "I'm better off alone,
I think it's only fair.

"So what's the point in texting here?
I'd only write goodbye!
An absent word is just as clear
As any wording why!

"I think it's better not to say,"
The lad opined with pride.

Alas, she tracked him down one day.

And Timmy fucking died.

FUCKING TRUTH! worked at a gas station, and one of my regulars whas honestly attractive, but she hung out with the wrong people and liked to party/club (not sure where though because where i live there isnt a whole lot of clubs if any so maybe bar hop?) and she'd usually stop by my gas station on her way to the club or way home drunk. but as i said she hung out with the wrong crowd so i slowly got to see her decline, seen her hooked drunk and high on marijuana, i seen her high on cocaine, and this whole time her appearance is getting ... not really worse but changing shes becoming more thin. eventually i left the gas station got a job somewhere else. i came back a year later to get a red bull on my way home from work and say hi to a ex coworker when i smelled something just horrible, like a mix between chemicals and shit. i turned around and this customer is walking by, and at first i didnt recognize her her hair had knots in it like she hadn't washed it in weeks it was a mess, she was practically a skeleton, she wore some old sun dress that had holes in it. it honestly looked like she was homeless. i walk up to the counter pay for my stuff and then my ex coworker takes a break (there was another employee there who rang the rest of the customers up) and we go outside to have a smoke, first thing i say is "holy fuck i didn't recognize so and so" excoworker just says "yeah she got into meth and pretty much went down hill." fucking meth is horrible shit.

#3363 – Teachers of reddit, what are some signs that a student is being abused or lives in a toxic environment ?

2020-10-27 12:19:06

/u/noorsomi

/u/Eucalyptus_Squid

A sign of sexual abuse is a child constantly grabbing their bum or genitals.

When I went through training for a job I thought, “Little kids are notoriously awful ass wipers, so how would I spot the difference between a kid with an itchy shitty bum and one who is being abused?” Just a couple months after training I noticed a young girl who constantly grabbed at her bum, and it struck me as really odd. I also noticed she would hide when a parent came to pick her up. Not in the “hehe come and find me” way, but “I really don’t want to go home” way, so I brought it to the attention of the director. A couple weeks later she was gone, and we were informed both parents had been arrested for making and distributing child pornography.

Edit: Holy cow, I wasn’t expecting this to get so much attention. I’m not sure what current awareness training involves these days (this incident occurred before 2010), but here’s some things to know if you’re a parent, guardian, or just have a little one in your life:

90% of victims know who their abuser is, so teach your kids how to protect themselves against sexual abuse.

1. Use proper names for body parts. Might sound weird to hear your three year old shouting penis or vagina, but it’s critical for children to know how to appropriately label their body parts. When it comes to investigation of a crime, there’s no room for misinterpretation of “he touched my penis” vs “she touched my cookie.”
2. Teach them it’s okay to refuse to hugs, kisses, and time around an adult or child. Little humans have gut instincts too, and we should respect it. Establish a code word they can use when they feel unsafe.
3. Teach them that respect does not mean blind obedience, and it’s okay to say no to an adult/peer who asks for inappropriate things.
4. Be aware of any physical changes to their genitals (bruising, bleeding, etc) or difficulty walking/sitting.
5. Behavioral/emotional changes can include: inserting objects into genitals, or trying to touch peers/adults in a sexual manner, refusing to take off clothes or adding extra layers, increased aggression, withdrawal, change in eating habits, bed wetting, clinginess, thumb sucking, or any other sign of age regression.

6. And the most important thing you can do is listen! If a child comes to you with information about someone else or themselves, stay calm, listen with compassion, take the child seriously, and report to the proper authorities immediately. If necessary, ask only open ended questions such as, "What did abc do," and not "Did abc touch your xyz."

Well done. The signs are usually there. It happened to me. I was eleven. It was six weeks after my mum committed suicide. My Dad, a very old school man, was left with a grieving daughter that he hadnt really ever interacted with. He knew I liked horses and animals so during school holidays for two weeks, he would drop me off at the little local wildlife sanctuary and trail riding offshoot. It was two weeks that changed my life forever. All the 'private lessons' in the bush by the dam. The bleeding that was not my period but I was too ashamed to say anything. Dad never told me about periods, nor did mum. I look back and feel so sad for that little girl. Losing mum then being dropped off into the hands of a monster every day. Dad remarried about four years later and I tried to tell my step mother. All I got was 'dont tell your father, it'll upset him'. Took me years to deal with but I guess I'll never know who I could have been. Please, if a kid shows anything that doesnt sit right, do the right thing. Take time to try and talk to them.

This chills me To my core. It pains me with anguish for you. As a father of a three year old I can at a very minimum promise that I am aware. I am watching. I am vigilant. This will not happen to anyone on my watch. I honestly don't know if that helps you in many meaningful way other than stories like your that don't get press or attention under normal circumstances have, at least for me, made me so much more vigilant and attentive toward what before just was not on my radar.

I hope you find some peace and healing.

Good man. Good dad. I dont know what made me share but there is so much of this happening in the world and not enough people listening to the young ones with nobody to turn to. Its not an easy or pleasant topic and the fixes take time. And, sadly, money. I wish there were more resources. Ive healed as much as I can on my own. I would have, however, liked to see the woman I could have been. Wont happen on your watch, I like that. I wish so many dark parts of the world didnt view children as an amusement or commodity or thing. Keep on keeping on Dad.

Many kids who are verbally abused will do the same to peers they think less of, or to younger kids. If a kid is calling someone horrible things (often things that kids should not say like swear words or violent threats) for a minor offense like being annoying, they learned that from someone at home. You can tell the difference between learning it from an adult and just repeating something they heard on TV because they will genuinely, really mean it and you can hear it in their voice. Quoting something they heard on TV doesn't usually have a context the way that genuine rage does. Honestly, a kid who is just enraged all the time is a huge red flag for me. Especially if they're under like ... 10.

I had one kid that other teachers had written off as a bad kid. I thought he was a sweet but angry kid. I worked out a system with him where he had freedom to express himself in class, but if he was getting too loud or wound up, I would calmly touch his shoulder and move on. It was a subtle reminder to be in control of his own emotions. He had a rough home life, his parents were addicts and out of the picture, his older brother regularly used him as a punching bag, his older sister was pregnant (and barely 15) and living with his strict nan and so many other things. It was no wonder the kid was angry.

I recognised that and spent the time listening to him. By the time I left the school (it was a 3 month placement), he'd moved up a banding to a higher level class. They realised that he was actually pretty smart, he'd just never been given a chance.

That was 11 years ago, and I think of 'J' often.

“Clowning Around”

It lies in the playground, as still as before -
A porcelain face in the dust of the floor -
A spatter of red from the curl of a smile -
A shape in the silence, and after a while -

You look from the window to see if it's there -
You look for the hue of the tangerine hair -
You look for the blue of its garb and its guise -
The whites of its cheeks and the blacks of its eyes.

But what does it matter?
What is it you hear?
The carnival music that plays in your ear?
The gurgle of laughter from somewhere behind?
The voices, the voices that speak in your mind?

Don't show them your worry.

Don't show them your fear.

We don't want the clowns to come looking, my dear.

The typical not a barber here but i use to go to a local barber college to get my hair cut because it was cheap. One girl had never cut a white guy's hair and her teacher asked if i was ok with it. I said sure she has to learn some how and its just hair it can be shaved and should grow back. Told her how i wanted the hair cut, pretty simple a little short and off the ears. Jokingly said do not take my ears off.

Long story short i left with a bald head and a band-aid on the top of my left ear, after bleeding like a stuck pig due to blood thinners!! where she nicked me with the scissors. Even her teacher couldnt save the hair cut. I did my best to try and help the girl calm down as she was ugly crying!!

Went back a month later and asked if the girl was there, thankfully she was and i simply smiled and said tound two... she did it perfect second time around.

When Little Timmy saw them near,
Descending from the sky -
He didn't doubt,

or fear,
Or stop to wonder why.

He simply watched them plot the night,
And through the darkness, slip -
The moon and stars reflected white
And bright upon the ship.

He watched the craft, and as it came,
He pondered on his own -
That life would never be the same -
That Earth was not alone.

He watched the sliding door release,
With open hope and pride.

Alas, they didn't come in peace.

January: Vaccine comes. It's free and has no side effects

February: Movies that was supposed to be released 2020 all come out and the theaters are full of masterpieces

March: Up and coming artists and authors have spent the lockdown sitting down to write and create. We're starting see the results of that.

April: Lou Bega releases Mambo no. 6 and it is all people can think about this month.

May: Turns out that climate change was a hoax. The climate just had a rough century and has learned to chill out more.

June: An alien escapes Area 51. Turns out he is a nice dude and guests all the late night talk shows. On the inevitable Joe Rogan appearance they both do DMT and learn so much about each other.

July: No one know why or how it happened, but suddenly money just isn't an issue anymore.

August: The whole alien thing from June has started to affect how we view eachother on the planet. We are seeing a drastic and long lasting decline in terrorism and crime.

September: God blessed us all

October-November: Finally some normal and mundane events

December: Home Alone remake with the original cast. All I want for christmas is eradicated. You got a memorable present, and you made everyone truly happy with the ones you gave.

Edit: Not to be that thank you for all the awards guy, but I couldn't keep it cool. I am grateful and glad to see all the

And when December came at last,
He looked upon the year that passed -
He wiped an eye to see the snow
That dropped and drifted down below
To where he sat with hope and glee,
And spied the scene he'd dreamed to see -

The christmas light -
the town awoke -
And through the clouds of chimney smoke,
He looked above to spot the sleigh
That upped and rose and rolled away,
And with a merry, laughing call,
The cry, "goodnight, to one and all!"

He watched him go -
he shared a smile -
He warmed his hands, and for a while,
There were no gripes -
there were no grumps -
There were no doubts or Donald Trumps -
There were no fears -
there were no ends -
But only love, and only friends.

He loaded up his music mix.

It started: "Mambo Number Six".

In cub scouts, we were doing the pinewood derby. I worked really hard on my car, (my dad helped, of course). I had already won the first 3 rounds, and before the final round, one of the dads of the of the other kids picked up my car to hand it to me. It "slipped" out of his hand, and broke the wheels when it hit the floor. I'm convinced it was not an accident, and he was sabotaging my car so his kid would win.

This was over 30 years ago, and I'm still salty about it.

/u/waytoomanylemons

One of my packs had to make a rule that only the parent of the scout could touch their car because stuff like this was happening way too often. The pinewood derby and the other racing events were meant to build sportsmanship yet some parents take it way overboard.

There's a movie making fun of exactly this called "Down and Derby"

/u/tappytaps

Yes - same with my sons' cub scout pack. Only the parent of the scout and the one person checking to see if the cars were qualified (weight, etc.) could touch the cars. If this was not followed, the offending party was immediately disqualified. When I expressed my shock at this to my husband because all the families currently involved with scouts are awesome, he said it was due to HUGE problems in the past that nearly escalated into fisticuffs that these rules were put in place. So, the problem was the PARENTS not the kids (as usual). Sigh.

I didn't study opium wars that good, but wasn't it started by China not wanting to trade, at all and resulting in brits being brits?

When I see popular reddit posts mentioning celebrities with weird ass names and I'm like, who the fuck are these people?

/u/philman132

This isn't just age, it's also a product of the internet era. It used to be that everyone watched the same shows on the same few channels or listened to the same few radio stations, or whatever, so everyone knew the same celebrities.

In this age where the monoculture has been shattered, everyone is watching different shows on Netflix, YouTube, etc, it's so much easier to find niches, no one knows the same set of celebrities anymore.

/u/aidanpryde98

For me this is the trending tab on Youtube. There are days when outside of the lone sports clip on there, I don't know a single person/group on there. And usually these folks have millions of subscribers. Shit is wild these days!

Just took a look at trending now, never usually look at it. Some news videos, some Apple iPhone reactions, a lot of music videos of artists I've never heard of, and yup, a lot of people I don't know and stuff where I have no idea what is going on. :(

#3342 – What's your secret that could literally ruin your life if it came out?

2020-10-11 17:51:04

/u/linus140

I have PTSD from my deployment in Afghanistan in 2009. That's not what would ruin my life. My friends, family, and coworkers know I have PTSD. What would ruin my life are the details. Only one person (excluding the soldiers near me) knows any details, and that's my wife. This would only ruin my life as everyone would look at me and treat me vastly different. I hide my pain well.

&#x200B;

I have seen so many wounded and dead bodies the images are engrained into my brain.

I've seen and heard the most disturbing screams from grown men from injuries. These screams still haunt me.

I've seen a small children brought into the FOB's hospital missing limbs from IEDs.

I've seen a small Afghan child that was hit in the chest with an RPG that did not explode get air lifted into the hospital. She didn't make it.

I had a 105mm round land approximately 50 meters behind me on the FOB and explode. If it wasn't for those concrete barriers you see on the highway (obviously taller and stacked on top of each other) blocking the blast, I'd be dead. I helped our medics pull a wounded man out of the back of the ambulance at the hospital. He lost both legs and one arm from an incoming mortar round. The tourniquets snapped on his thighs and soaked me from head to toe in blood.

I watched soldiers die right in front of me during an ambush.

I watched a small boy, couldn't have been older than 13, pick up an AK-47 during this ambush and point it towards myself and a couple soldiers near me. I had to make a split second decision, that felt like an eternity, on what to do. I hesitated and the boy fired a shot. I almost died. The bullet nicked my shoulder strap on my armor, kept going and landed in my buddy's neck. I instinctively fired back.

I immediately realized I killed a child but didn't have time to process it. I had to stop my buddy's neck from bleeding. He bled out while I was applying pressure on the way back to the FOB. I never had the proper time to process this until I got back State-side.

I know it was in pure self defense. A him or me situation. And yet this still haunts me to this day because I shot a child. This was 11 years ago now.

I'm still suffering. This is the first time I've ever gone into detail about any of this to anyone other than my wife. We've been married for almost 9 years, and she never knew the full details until a couple months ago. She just knew the major points as I wasn't ready to talk to her about it. I was in denial. Sometimes I'm still in denial.

War is hell.

&#x200B;

Edited to add: Because some people choose to believe this is "too much action" and "not believable", I was working in a major hospital for a good portion of my deployment in Bagram.

Bagram was one of the major hospitals where wounded and KIA were flown to before being sent to Germany and eventually home to either be treated (WIA) or put to rest (KIA).

&#x200B;

Edit 2: Seems I have to reiterate Rule 8 of this subreddit because people can't read.

#3338 – If Cinderella’s shoe fit perfectly, then why did it fall off when she ran?

2020-10-09 18:02:57

/u/T3knikal95

/u/Portarossa

Because magic users are tricky.

The reason the glass slipper in Cinderella didn’t turn back to a regular slipper (or disappear) at midnight is because the Fairy Godmother was messing with us: her main goal was to set Cinderella up for life, and to do that she needed a way for the Prince to find her. She could easily have magicked Cinderella into the life she wanted, arbitrary midnight deadline be damned, but instead the Fairy Godmother decided to make the Prince want her for her own qualities and to prove his love by tracking Cinderella down. To do that, she had to make sure that something was left behind, so she popped that little glass sumbitch off so the Prince would have a lead to follow.

We are all puppets in the hands of the Fairy Godmother.

/u/StraightTrossing

I was going to say, the real question is: why didn’t the glass slipper disappear or turn back to a normal dusty shoe at midnight along with everything else?

This answer answers all the questions!

/u/lilmitchell545

Another good argument for the slippers not turning back/disappearing is because the fairy godmother didn’t “magic” them into existence like everything else, she just gave them to her after the magic happened as a final touch. So the slippers were never magic, they were just glass slip-

#3332 – Doctors of Reddit, what are the dead give-away signs that someone is faking?

2020-10-05 06:11:46

/u/Tank_Girl_Gritty_235

If someone is unconscious, make a fist and rub your knuckles against their sternum (chest bone). Put some pressure behind it and rub quickly up and down (up towards chin, down towards belly button). It's called a sternal rub and is incredibly painful, but won't harm the person. It very, very hard to completely ignore and continue with the ruse of faking being unconscious. The only more sure thing is asking your partner to hand you the eye needle to take some ocular fluid while they're passed out so they won't feel the pain of the needle in their eye. ETA - There's no ocular needle, at least not on an ambulance. We say that because not everyone knows that and they don't want to risk it. ETA 2 - RIP my inbox. Apparently the sternal rub isn't common practice anymore because people literally went too hard. Sorry! Also I feel old af now.

/u/Terds4Nerds

My stepmom was passed out once and totally unresponsive so we had to call an ambulance. I don't think she was faking, but when the emt did a sternum press she literally came back to life like Frankenstein... she was like "aaarrgh-hhhh!!!!!" then took a deep breath. it was honestly so crazy. I was 19 and have still never seen anything like it lol edit: sternum rub is name I guess my bad

“I call them pins!” he said and sighed,
And shook his head and softly cried,
And stretched his arms to God above,
And laughed with light and life and love,
And sobbed with joy and open tears,
And open hope and dreams and fears,
For all that was,
and all that would,
And all that will,
and all that could,
And all because the word was fair,
The word was good, the word was there -

“I call them pins.”

He wiped an eye.

She softly whispered:

” ... so do I.”

Funny (for lack of a better word) story:
When I was 10, my family went to Florida on vacation with some other extended family. There was a plan where my parents went back home (MA) a few days before my brother and I so we could stay longer with my aunt and cousins. It was my first time traveling with just my older brother and my second time on a plane, the first being the trip there. Coming into Logan airport, our airplane started to fall out of the sky. Quite literally. Apparently it only happened for about 3 to 5 seconds, but the pressure made the oxygen masks fall from the ceiling. I'd seen enough movies at that point to know that basically meant we were going to die. I was for sure crying and freaking out like everyone else on the aircraft, for sure the most frightening experience experience of my life, bar none... But I distinctly remember thinking, "I'm never going to get to finish my Age of Empires 2 campaign." So, a video game was ostensibly my last thought.

/u/Blue-2th

did you finish the game?

Also I hope there was no major damage and that there was no PTSD

/u/theguywhodunit

Thank you. We were all okay and it was long enough ago where, if no one died, everyone just went about their day. I never got diagnosed but I am, not surprisingly, not a fan of air travel.

I did finish, fucking great game. That whole franchise is fantastic.

He spoke his final words with fear,
A murmured thought for none to hear,
A last regret to rise anew.

He whispered: "... Age of Empires 2."

Thomas Edison. Biggest monopolist ever and took credit for other people's work. He didn't invent the lightbulb but bought the rights and advanced it. He monopolized the film-projector + most films at the time and it took a very long lawsuit to get that fixed. He took many creations from his employees and put his name on it. This wasn't illegal because of the contracts employees signed at the time but it's not exactly a sign of good will. I don't hate the guy but his character is often completely exaggerated.

/u/floridas_lostboy

Thomas Edison and Henry Ford's winter homes are in my city. As soon as students are in 3rd grade, all the schools would bring us to their homes, and really try to make you believe both of them were good people.

/u/XxsquirrelxX

Oh Ford is by far 100 times worse than Edison. Edison was a thief. Ford was a literal Nazi sympathizer. Even received one of Nazi Germany's highest civilian awards and was responsible for writing "The International Jew", a major anti-semitic work that Hitler himself admired.

You'd be horrified at how many of our idolized businessmen from the 20s and 30s were super anti-Semitic, and some of them were full on fascist.

| Edison was a thief.

“I made it,” she whispered -

”I made it!” she cried -

”I made it,” she said, in her pleasure and pride.

”I made an invention of virtue and worth!

I’ve thought of a thing that could further the Earth!

“Just look at my notes,” she explained to a friend -

So Edison looked at the words she had penned.

”What say you?” she asked, with a nod of her head.

He pondered a moment.

” ... I made it,” he said.

This one is starting to creep up on me and my sister. Our parents are in their 60’s. Retired, in okay-ish health, but they’re starting to show their age. The worst part though, is they live over 800 miles away from me. I visit when I can, but it’s a long trip, and I only get so much time off of work. Once a year is about all I can do. If I look at the life expectancy for my country, I have less than 15 trips left to see them. I call them every Sunday, but it’s just not the same. It’s tough. Edit:. There's a House episode that did that for me.

He spends the whole episode with a woman caught in a collapsed building,, trying to convince her to amputate her leg. They talk about being disabled and how life still goes on and is worth living even in pain.

Then he cuts her leg off, she gets a fatty embolism that he can do nothing about, and she dies anyways.

His utter frustration over doing everything right and still failing, it was just so relatable and I felt it.

You say this like it's a joke.

A buddy sub-letted my university apartment one summer. I forgot I'd given him two keys (one for him and one for his girlfriend). He gave me back his. We all forgot about the girlfriends.

She would occasionally come in when she was driving into or out of town and passing the house, and do "nice" (READ THAT AS CREEPY AS FUCK) things for us.

Example, she's be early to see him, know he had class till 3pm. Go into his house and like, do the dishes. Then go out and get lunch, pass by our house, and then come in and do our dishes to be nice. Then go meet him. Never leave a note or anything.

I basically thought we had a ghost or I was losing my mind. Because just little things like chores would be done and I swore we didn't do them. After a bit laundry would be done, and folded or put away wrong, so I was pretty sure someone was doing it, or my girlfriend I lived with was lying if she said she didn't do it. Then house hold items would be in weird places.

Eventually she baked up bread and left it on the counter. Again no note but that was a very much "WTF SOMEONE IS DOING SOMETHING" move.

If it had been more modern I would have done a webcam and saw what was happening, but alas, instead I talked to the landlord, he changed the locks.

Then she phoned me one day and asked me why I changed the locks. And told us she was doing that all along.

It was a really sweet and weird fucking thing.

PS - we gave her another key with a heart on it after all was said and done

PPS - they are still alive, got married and are living happily ever after. I probably wrote in the past tense because it was like 15 years ago and I don't see them as much as I'd like anymore.

It grew and it flourished, expanding and bright.
A water that nourished,
a life in the light.
An ocean around it,
forever and on.

And that’s where we found it.

And then it was gone.

/u/LazySloth

We threw and we tarnished, expanding the blight.
We did this unpunished,
like thieves in the night.
No motion to cease it,

And now we must face it.
Our planet is gone.

To think,
there was time when a man couldn’t text -
A time when they sat in the quietude, vexed -
A time when they vainly attempted a call -
And saw there was nothing,
no service at all.

The darkness,
it must have been wholly complete -
With nothing but darkness and doom at their feet -
An absence of signal, a bottomless blur.

Thank goodness it’s over.

How savage they were.

”... but in darkness I remember -
For I dream of what was true -
On the morning of November
Back in nineteen-thirty-two.

“We had chased the fight down under -
We were snoozing under stars -
When the footsteps came like thunder,
And the souvenirs were scars.

“They had followed us and found us
In the silence where we slept -
And manoeuvred to surround us
As we wandered and we wept.

“There was nothing but the killing -
There was little ‘cept for death -
And the sounds of noises chilling,
And the stench of emu breath.

“And whenever there’s a weather
Where the clouds are drawing in -
I can almost see the feather,
And my fallen former kin.

“And in darkness I remember -
For I dream of what was true -
On that morning of November
Back in nineteen-thirty-two ...

“But the feeling isn't going -
And it's worse than that, my friends -
For I spend my moments knowing...

... that it never ever ends.”

My neighbor loaded his garbage tote with extra sand left-over from building his firepit. When the garbage man came to get it, he could not move it. He yowled in anger, tied a rope on it, dragged with the truck to the middle of the alley and finally managed to get it in position for the truck mechanism to lift the tote and empty it into the truck. The man was almost paralyzed with anger when he saw the sand. Such a nice guy, too.

Those guys are under incredible pressure to complete their routes quickly. Anything you can do to smooth there way is a kindness.

Not virtual, but I was a guest speaker at a music college last year. My mic was still on when I finished, went backstage and said “well that was fucking horrible”.

I wasn't called back to speak again.

Edit: for those curious of the aftermath, I heard it out of the speakers and an immediate uproar of laughter ensued. I would have laughed had I been a student, but as a working professional it was one of the single most awkward experiences of my life.

I decided to stop comparing myself to my brother and try to focus on the improvable.

/u/christo334

God I wish I could do that. I'm the big brother I should have my shit together.

/u/i0h4nnes

I have to disagree with you, I figured recently that nobody really has their shit together at any age. Some people are just better at pretending. You got this, king.

/u/christo334

Well maybe not in some area but he is doing much better than me. He has a stable job which he makes quite a bit of money. He bought his house and he is in the process of buying a 6 apartment building.

/u/AngryLaoG

As a brother who compares himself in a similar regard, I think it's important to remember that no matter what the comparison looks like or how you perceive it, a great point of view to adopt is "he's doing his thing and I'm doing mine. Proud of him, proud of me". It's when you're not or no longer proud of yourself that you consider personal change. It's familiar to look over and feel bad about 1 or 2 comparisons, but a great thing about being an individual is 1) it's not a competition and 2) nobody else can replace you or your contributions to the world. The value of a human soul is intangible. It'd be nice to have equal or superior qualities compared to your brother, but that would remove from your individuality and individual contributions. If you and your brother's relationship is stable, perhaps he can offer advice or at least boost your confidence on the matter. Tldr: Instead of classic (brotherly) comparison, encourage acknowledging that individuals all have valuable, individual qualities that they should be proud of (:

I sometimes think I see his face -
The man I could have been -
The man who walks another place,
Another stage and scene.

Perhaps he never made the same
Mistakes across the years -
Perhaps he never felt the shame,
The shaken pride and tears.

Perhaps he wed the perfect wife,
And sailed across the sea.

Perhaps he led a better life.

Who cares?

He isn't me.

/u/lookoutforthebadger

You mean a button that filters out reddit?

/u/jews4beer

That's where my head went too. Every god damn thing is political these days. If you don't think it's political, chances are someone else does.

/u/barnesandnobles

Even if everything isn't political, politics inevitably creeps into nearly every sub. I've been aggressively unsubscribing from news and politics subs and still hear about stuff all the time from reddit.

/u/Worried_Flamingo

There's a strong trend of political polarization and anti-centrism in America that is bent on politicizing everything. If any person or institution tries to be non-political or detached from politics, they specifically target those people/institutions and cast them in a political light. Sports, Christmas, you name it – anything that is considered too widely beloved or irrelevant to politics is specifically targeted and politicized. The idea is that everybody is forced to take a side at all times, in every area of their lives, thus everybody is forced to join the fight. Anybody who wants to stop fighting is the first against the wall.

Soon you won't be able to pick a paint color without making a political statement.

/u/Hoffman81

“Soon you won't be able to pick a paint color without making a political statement.”

This is already a thing.

One major thing I learned in the process of getting my polisci degree is that politics seeps, or is innately, a part of every single facet of life. Avoid the news at your own, and everyone else's, peril.

Edit: yay, an award! Thank you

One major thing I learned in the process of getting my polisci degree is that politics seeps, or is innately, a part of every single faucet of life. Avoid the news at your own, and everyone else's, peril.

Honestly, I hate it. I used to work in news media ... Still consume a good bit of it, but am careful where I get it from. At the same time, I've come to realize on the internet that loud and ignorant outweighs anything else—insofar as popularity is concerned. I talk with my close friends about politics, who come from various points across the political spectrum... But we all realize that most others aren't like us. People would rather just be told by everyone around them that they're right than be challenged and reach any well-thought-out compromise.

It's the difference between, "I dunno, I'm not so keen on illegal immigration." "Pfft, sounds like something a Trumper would say! Why do you hate immigrants!? Why do you love Trump!? You know he's a fucking racist, right!? I bet you voted for that fucking racist! You're a racist! You're literally ruining America!"

And, "I dunno, I'm not so keep on illegal immigration." "Hm... Why?"

Man, the internet really did fuck us in a way, huh?

Internet just enforced some things we have in us naturally. We like to be right, as you mentioned, we like to be a part, we, actually, like to be enraged - it gives us dopamine boost. The network just made it really easy to find a bubble to stuck in. And bubbling promote team thinking, and, therefore team identification, and, therefore demonization of other teams. This is a very simplified explanation, of course, but we got too used to 140 characters limit.

One reason that crows and ravens are associated with death is because they would often follow armies as they marched to battle. Being both carrion birds and extremely intelligent,

Female mummies in Ancient Egypt were always more decomposed than their male counterparts. They discovered that this was because male bodies were embalmed a lot sooner than female bodies. He stands, and he stares
where she lies so serene -
Her long golden hairs

are the brightest he's seen - Her lips are the color of crimson, a blur -
But duller, much duller, than one time they were.

And there,
in her eyes
as he watches, he sees -
A welcoming rise,
like a sigh on the breeze -
A message, a mission, from somewhere within -
A pleading petition to bend and begin.

And so,
in the shade,
and the hue of the gloom -
The light starts to fade
as he crosses the room -
He dreams of the pleasure that lies in her bed.

The beauty to treasure.

A pity she's dead.

Google Analytics Individual Qualification! It's a really easy way to get your foot in the door with data analysis. Throw in a class on SQL while you're at it. As long as you're not trying to get into a Data Science role, you'll look like you have quant skills and lots of recruiters look for these skills.

/u/JuiceGasLean

Can you get a data analysis position with these? I've been trying to learn Python for the past few months, should I learn this Google Analytics course and a basics tutorial on SQL? What type of positions would that open up?

/u/ThisCatOrThatOne

With programming, experience is key. People honestly won't care too much about certifications, we want to see that you can actually do the thing. My advice is to focus less on getting a certification and focus more on demonstrating your skill. For example, build a website and put the url on your resume. That'll be much more impressive than some free cert. Build a game or an app with python and give provide the link. Be creative. If your resume is light, the certification may be useful to fill empty space on paper but it won't get you hired.

/u/JuiceGasLean

Damn I'm not smart enough to make apps/games man. I understand the basics but cannot for the life of me train my brain to use the multiple things I've learned to create functions that run even average programs. I'm not sure I'm made for coding but then again Idk if I'm made for anything.

/u/bpod1113

Hey man, you're better than you think you! I'm in a similar situation trying to learn Python but haven't gotten far enough to build something (at least that's what I think) let's keep at it and one day we'll surprise ourselves let's keep at it and one day we'll surprise ourselves.

I'll tell you why,
I'll tell you how,
I'll try to help you see -
You really suck at that right now,
But think how it could be!

For if you practice day and night,
(And were I you, I would) - You're sure to find,
as well you might,
You'll soon be ...

... kinda good.

The Digital Garage by Google. It shows that you have knowledge of how Online Marketing (Analytics, Adwords, E-mail marketing etc) works. It's a good introductory certificate and you can put it up on LinkedIn.

Openclassrooms has some certifications, it's also a pretty good site

Psychological First Aid Online. Free, about six hours long. Hosted by the National Child Traumatic Stress Network and promoted by the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs.

You learn how to help disaster survivors get referenced to the professionals they need and how to triage those with more damaging psychological distress before it gets worse. Learn the signs, symptoms, etc., and know where to forward the survivors to the proper agencies. Additionally there are some things on how to secure relief sites in consideration for physical and mental health.

There are also free courses on the website regarding helping children and military families with specific issues, but since I have not taken them yet I cannot comment on those classes.

The course is tailored to the U.S., but the ideas should be easily applicable anywhere. Anyone may register for a class online and take it at their own pace. If there are any issues, please let me know so I may update this post.

Psychological First Aid is more designed towards a large-scale response. For individual psychological training, consider the QPR Institute which trains you in suicide prevention techniques in multiple different settings and environments. PFA for large-scale, QPR for small-scale.

On the EPA website, you can get a certificate for NPDES, National Pollution Discharge Elimination System. Will be good for any environmental, energy, chemical, or related field job.

The questions on reddit - the queries and more -
There's probably someone who's asked them before.
They come and they go in an instant and then -

They come and they go in an instant again!

So if you've a query,
a question,
a thought -
A puzzle for posing you feel that you ought -
I've something to tell you,
to warn you,
to wit:

Don't look for it, buddy.

The search function's shit.

Yes. Taste buds die every two weeks and are replaced, therefore I will only have one tastebud. Since the average mouth has like 10,000 taste buds, I think I can handle having one in my butthole for $5,000,000

/u/the_honeyman

Besides, dude just said a tastebud grows. Not that the tastebud is actually connected to anything.

Use the library for everything you can: textbooks, movies, games, music, printing, quiet study space, tutoring, etc. Librarians love to help and you might be surprised what they can lend out to you. I borrowed a telescope last week!

/u/RAWkWAHL

Librarian here! We do love to help!!!! Many libraries have hotspots so you can save data if you aren't on an unlimited plan. We use a program that searches other libraries for books and then we can request to borrow it. It is a great resource so just because your library doesn't have it doesn't mean they can't get it for you. We do have random things to check out like you said. Some around us check out fishing poles and life jackets.

/u/newsensequeen

Guess that's why a library is my favorite place. Not only you can obtain books and resources, but also they're one of the few endangered places left in our society where you're allowed to exist without expectation of spending money. <sup>As</sup>

long as you're not overdue

/u/Idiotian

“The Librarian”

Have you ever heard the churning
Whispered sound of paper turning?
Have you heard the rustle-wrinkle
Rumpled hush of paper crinkle?

Have you thought to steal a fiction
Just to find to your affliction
Shadows stalking books for stacking?
Shapes behind the paper-backing?

Have you taken tomes for study
On your own or with a buddy,
Just to hear at edge of hearing
Something softly scrunching nearing?

If you've seen these aberrations,
Spied these strange associations,
Warning, would-be-perpetrator -

Well beware the page-curator.

#3284 – Art teachers of Reddit, what's your “Draw anything you want” story?

2020-08-22 17:09:59

/u/redmambo_no6

/u/yellowbirdrainbow

I ran arts and craft classes at a youth group for disadvantaged kids. Decided one day to give them total freedom, I just put out all the supplies we had and let them go crazy. Kids made some really cool works of art all very colourful and creative. I was talking to one kid when another asked me to help him spell things for his artwork. I go over to his table with him and he's been making a card for a boy in his class at school. He tells me his friend's mum had just died from cancer and he wanted to make a card for him to cheer him up but he couldn't spell anything he wanted to write. He was 13 years old and I had to help him spell out something like "dear , I am so sorry about your mum but I will always be your friend and here for you. Love _". I had to help him spell his own name. He made the card totally unprompted. I feel for the guy, he was totally sweet and caring for his friend and really smart, he'd just not got the help he needed. Went home after and had a little sob.

Edit: Hey guys. Thanks for the rewards! I really appreciate all the lovely things you have been saying.

I'd just like to say that I really didn't do anything special here. I only helped him spell out a card. I wish I could have done more but I was fresh out of highschool and was only volunteering. I actually had been in one of the other youth groups they ran and been asked to volunteer in this one as they needed more hands. I left shortly after this for university.

I reported the incident to my supervisor and she assured me he was getting the care and help he needed but they could not tell me more for security reasons.

He was the real hero here. I hope he and his friend are doing okay.

Thanks again.

“dear , I am so sorry about your mum but I will always be your friend and here for you. Love _”.

Life is trouble.
Life is doubt.
to figure out.
Some things break
and some things bend.

I will always be your friend.

Some things come
and some things go.
Some things leave you
feeling low.
Some folks lie,
and some pretend.

I will always be your friend.

Life is hard
and life is strange.
Some things alter.
Some things change.
Some things finish.
Some things end.

I will always be your friend.

#3283 – Art teachers of Reddit, what’s you “Draw anything you want” story?

/u/Pays_in_snakes

In early middle school, we did a project where we used cardboard draped in colorful paper mache to make a sound-word, like ‘wham’ or ‘crinkle.’ I was really into knights at the time, so I made the word that was the sound of someone unsheathing a sword.

That word was ‘schlong.’

/u/Odd_Fencer

Ah, yes. The sound of unsheathing your sword.

/u/ooh_a_pineapple

Mine goes shlort

| schlong.

He stood in the still of the silence, bereft -
The last of his unit, the only one left.
His breastplate was bloody - his dagger was blunt -

He stared at the army that waited in front.

They gathered in masses with weapon and shield -
They pulled back their bows as they marched on the field.

They came without mercy -
they came without fear -

They came as he watched through the mist of a tear.

But if it was time he was destined to die -
"I'll do it with courage," he said with a sigh.
His movements were nimble.
His fingers were quick.

He pulled down his helmet...

... and took out his dick.

#3281 – How's your mental health doing right now?

2020-08-20 05:36:52

/u/Aim_Hi

/u/ShibertInu

I don't want to live and I don't want to die. What a way to exist.

/u/clover-toes

Are you me? I feel the same. Like everything in my life has led me to this state of being stuck and I don't want to be here but I don't want to not be here.

/u/QSB59

I feel the same but I've been lucky that I still have my job and it pays well and I'm in a great relationship. So my mental health being shit makes so little sense to me. And it even stresses me out more cause I'm mad at myself for not being happy all the time.

/u/TheJKMan

I think we're creating a chain of similarly thinking Redditors. One of things I do love about Reddit though is the fact I feel like I can actually admit how I feel in situations like these. Makes my depression feel lessened.

Edit: I'm truthfully surprised by how many people I'm guessing can relate to this. Either way, no matter the subreddit, you all are weirdly enough kind of a dysfunctional family outside of a family that I love to visit. Thank you all.

... I can actually admit how I feel in situations like these.
Makes my depression feel lessened.

I know I'm out of hope to share -
I know it's hard to cope and care -
I know denied inside
my heart,
I think, I feel I stand apart -

I know the feeling's here to stay -
And nothing moves the fear away -
And every time I'm feeling small,
I know that no one cares at all -

But when I think I'm on my own,
It helps to know:
I'm not alone.

It isn't much, I must admit.

But sometimes talking helps a bit.

/u/TristonCarter

What else is he supposed to jerk off to?

/u/Majikkani_Hand

It's on his neck. It's more of a public service than a personal use thing.

/u/ashtotheshoop

Could be jerking off in front of a mirror

/u/ejensen29

Two mirrors?

/u/cloud9ineteen

It's for jerking off at the barbershop obviously

/u/wunderduck

Barbershops are the best public place to jerk off. You're seated and expected to remain seated for the duration of your stay and they cover you from the neck down so you have privacy.

On an unrelated note, does anyone know of a good barber? I'm no longer welcome at my old one.

There's going to be good days and there's going to be bad days. I used to convince myself that I didn't think of him anymore, but the truth was I thought of him every day, until I didn't. People say you need time, but you also need patience. Just when I thought I was finally getting over him, I started to dream of him. I would wake up in tears because of how angry I was that I was doing so good on moving on, yet all it took was one 15 second dream to pull me back 20 steps. But in order to move on, you have to let yourself feel every emotion and have patience.

/u/Baws_g

This is exactly what is happening to me right now. It is frustrating. I was doing better, now I dream about her every night since a few nights and it makes each start of my day a sad one. I improve during the day and then the cycle repeats itself. I wanna reach out and talk every morning but I know it would only make it worse for me.

/u/umanghome

I held myself back from texting until one day I didn't. The conversation quickly made me realise whoever I was dreaming about isn't the same person as them - the person in those dreams was my idea of them. Haven't dreamt about them or felt anything towards since.

I also keep a list of things that led to things ending that I keep referring back to, every time I start feeling something.

The conversation quickly made me realise whoever I was dreaming about isn't the same person as them - the person in those dreams was my idea of them.

I have dreamt of you there with the sun in your hair, and your fingers entangled in mine.
I have dreamt of your smile and I've dreamt for a while of a painting, a picture divine.

I have dreamt of the way, and the words that you'll say - but I've learned from those dreams of before.

You exist in my mind in a picture designed in a dream -

just a dream,
nothing more.

I am also in this same exact spot. Dream of her like every other night, and I never usually remember my dreams. All I want to do is text her. Worst part for me, I have to work with her every day. Not easy putting it aside

Dream of her like every other night, and I never usually remember my dreams...

There's nothing more I like to do than drift to sleep and dream of you.

I think of you,
and how you smile,
and what you do,
and for a while,
there's only you,
and only me -

and nowhere else I'd rather be.

And then I wake.

And then you're gone.

/u/Mors_ad_mods

it’s so hard to start from scratch with a whole other person

You really can’t. The best part of a relationship is the history you’ve built with a person. A new relationship (presumably we’re talking about monogamous romantic relationships here...) means you’ve lost the old one. That time invested, those shared experiences simply cannot be recovered and transferred to the new relationship. You’re starting over, but you’re older. The clock is always ticking.

/u/ohiojeepdad

This hits hard. After a 21 year marriage, it's hard to open up. So much truth in your statement.

/u/Mors_ad_mods

I realized I was getting old when it occurred to me that if I lost my wife, I wouldn't be willing to date a woman young enough to safely have more children... nor would I want to be dealing with an infant any longer. Those days are firmly in my past.

Perhaps it's a foolish or fanciful claim -
But no other pain is precisely the same.
I speak from acquaintance, and say that it's true -
You don't really know what it means till you do.

It's bitter and brutal, and cruelly unfair -
The harshest of truths, and the hardest to bear -
For there, at the end, with your pieces of heart -

Your lives carry on, but you live them apart.

Damn I was just thinking of buying some.

Buy wooden block or stump (or any other material) weighing approximately what you're looking for, attach handle, lift.

*Could even just use a bucket and fill it with water. Could make convenient shapes from concrete etc.

You joke but my husky likes to jump on me and try to play bite me when I'm doing workouts in the living room. So between my husky and my baby, whoever is fussy, I grab and either curl them or do squats. And if the GF comes home grumpy curl her too!

Need some power?
Try a poodle!
Hoist a husky!
Boost a breed!
Lift yourself a Labradoodle!
Mutts are all the mass you need!

Want to ease your efforts early?
Want to end up tall and tough?
Dogs are built to make you burly!

Even if the workout's ruff.

I refused to take off a band aid when I was around 6 years old. It got infected and they almost had to amputate my leg.

When Little Timmy got a cut,
A scratch, to be precise -
He said: "I think it's better, but I think the band aid's nice.

"I like my tiny band aid friend,
My budding bro," he said -
"The pal on which I might depend
For all the years ahead!

When Little Timmy felt an itch,
A quiver in his nose -
His nostril hair began to twitch,
An inner squirm arose.

He held his breath and raised his hand -
He blinked a time or two -
He closed his eyes and rose to stand -
But nothing wandered through.

“Well that’s all right,” he whispered pleased.
He took his seat and sighed.
He shook his head -
and then he sneezed.

And Timmy fucking died.

#3261 – People who saved themselves for marriage and eventually got divorced, what was your approach towards sex after the divorce?

2020-08-09 08:35:23

/u/Sig770

/u/dirtsmcmerts

One of my lifelong friends comes from an extremely Christian family. All three kids were taught how bad sex before marriage is. Two of the three ended up with children out of wedlock. My close friend of these siblings “saved” herself but ended up rushing into marriage with very little self-awareness and found herself in a completely sexually (and otherwise) incompatible marriage. All three are divorced at least once now. One has more baby-mamas than I can keep track of.

After my friend’s divorce she abandoned the no sex before marriage business. She didn’t have any wild escapades but developed strong sexual (and otherwise) chemistry with her now-husband. Her parents still tried to shame them. It was a clusterfuck to watch over the years.

/u/poopellar

I know a man with lots of oats.
He hasn't horses, sheep or goats.
He doesn't keep a hive of bees.
He doesn't turn his milk to cheese.

I know a man with lots of oats.
He doesn't fish on wooden boats.
He doesn't farm.
He doesn't plow.
He doesn't care for pig or cow.

I know a man with lots of oats.
He doesn't trade them in for notes.
He doesn't sell them on his stall.
He doesn't sell his oats at all.

I know a man with lots of oats.
He keeps them in his pants and coats.
He gets as many as he can.

You see,
he is a Quaker man.

/u/Sig770

/u/sendgoodmemes

I knew a girl that was very hands off prior to marriage, I never really thought too much about it until I went to her wedding and before they kissed the pastor made the announcement that this will be their first kiss and I was blown away that they have never kissed before, but after their “you may now kiss the bride” kiss it was obviously their first kiss. The rest of the wedding and reception went well enough and I heard nothing from them for a few months until someone told me they are getting a divorce, less then 6 months later. I have a few theories on why, I think the bride is asexual and either never realized it or did not reveal that prior to getting married. She got a bunch of tattoos after the divorce, full chest ink, sleeves. But I never heard of her dating after, but We’re not close.

/u/strawberry-bubble

I used to think I was asexual when it came to being in a relationship with guys. when it came to get physical it’s like something would just turn off in my head. I didnt think anything of it, I just thought it was shyness. Turns out I was just really gay.

I saw a post a few months ago by a girl who keeps finding videos on pornhub that were taken of her being raped while apparently very obviously underage. She said she reports them over and over to pornhub and they are rarely taken down. As if in this situation she hasn't already been traumatised enough, she also has to try and police the distribution of those videos seemingly alone against a company that didn't seem to give a shit about it.

#3257 – Reddit, whats your “Anyways, we’re married now” story?

/u/pkunk-is-not-dead

met a girl online about 20 years ago one summer after college, found out we live in nearby towns, so decided to get together.

Go out on a few dates, drive by local pre-school: me: “hey, that’s where I went to pre school!” her: “that’s where I went to pre school!” That day we find a pre school class photo, there we are 2 feet from each other.

A few months later, my dad finds some old footage of a Christmas play our preschool class put on. We’re standing right next to each other.

EDIT: wow thanks for the love!

1. Yes, happily married 16 years now, 3 awesome kids. We’re very lucky.
2. Yes, the Internet was a thing in 1998 and was pretty commonly used, at least at college. We even had a ‘high speed’ connection on campus
3. We met on an old chat client called ICQ, which is still around apparently!
4. I actually proposed to her on the playground at the preschool we both attended.

/u/TexasFordTough

/u/Lowellferses

Honestly jaded. I was one of those kids who always did well in school so I was always typecast as the "smart kid." This came with the unfortunate side effect that every time we had to do those activities where everyone went around the class and wrote what they liked about people, every time my page would be filled with virtually that and just that. It's not bad as a compliment but when like 95% of the compliments you've ever gotten is that, it puts a lot of pressure on you cause you feel like if you're ever not smart there goes most of the nice shit anyone's said about you.

It also comes with other expectations as well. Once you're typecast as the "smart guy" everyone expects you to go on and have a "smart guy" career. Like just being adequate won't do you feel pressured to have to be successful.

But overall by itself it's still a nice compliment it's just once you've heard it so often while not getting a lot of other compliments it wears on you

It also comes with other expectations as well. Once you're typecast as the "smart guy" everyone expects you to go on and have a "smart guy" career. Like just being adequate won't do you feel pressured to have to be successful.

"You're destined for greatness,"
they said with a smile -
"You're destined for greatness,"
and after a while -
I almost believed them, that that was my fate -
I almost believed that I'd just end up great.

I waited for greatness,
to watch while it neared -
But something was missing.
It never appeared.
And life was a whole lot of nothing,
a mess.

And "great" sort of happened without me, I guess.

/u/KENPACHI-KANIIN

They can do that? That's kind of unsettling also hardcore

/u/Adthay

Most tattoo ink is made from animal ashes in the first place. That's why vegan tattoo ink exists.

/u/dogfood666

Most tattoo inks are vegan. The vegan thing is a rumor created by marketing. It's like when company's put "halal" or "kosher" on products that are obviously that just to grab that market. They might as well write "lead free" or "made with 0% battery acid" which obviously no inks would contain but by saying your products doesn't have those things you imply your competitors products do.

EDIT: I'm not saying kosher and halal things are a ploy. I'm saying that companies that already make products that conform to those standards will choose to add the identifying symbols to be immediately preferable to people who practice these diets. Much like vegan labels on tattoo ink.

EDIT: a better example then kosher and hala would have been gluten free chicken, low cholesterol water, fat free gummy bears, and asbestos free cornflakes. -there is a significant amount of non-vegan tattoo equipment but not as much as the existence of advertised "vegan tattoo ink" would lead you to believe. It's not like most tattoo equipment is non-vegan and a vegan would need to seek out vegan alternatives like soy-milk.

Instead, I'm now the manager, have fixed nearly 100 issues I inherited from the previous manager, store sales have improved greatly, and I suddenly have a career.

All thanks to the global pandemic. Yay?

Edit: Holy hell this escalated quick, I'll do my best to answer these questions during my down time between customers.

Edit2:

Location: Canada

How I became manager: COVID-19 hits and I am the first of the 4 workers to be laid off, during the morning of what I then expected to be my last shift.

1 week later...

The original manager has children, so when everything was shut down the owner laid her off so she could apply for CERB, take care of her kids, and lose very little income.

Assistant manager, now set to take over the store after Cannabis is deemed essential, doesn't know or didn't care about CERB, makes a fuss about OM being laid off, and has not taken his training seriously. I receive a call from the owner asking if I would be willing to come back to work as he no longer trusts the AM to not do anything stupid.

The next morning I am informed that AM has been laid off, and going forward I will be the "acting manager"

Edit3: Issues include but are not limited to, products being improperly labeled, categorized, and priced. (She was pricing a handful of items at a 300%+ mark up, mistakenly I hope?) She also made over 70 inventory errors, making it look like either had two to three times the amount of individual products or the opposite side where it looked like we had only half of the product in our inventory. This amounted to the appearance of nearly $100,000 in missing product, which is frowned upon by the governing body, and led an inspector to be on my ass for nearly 8 weeks while I had to find explanations for the discrepancies.

Edit4: After roughly 3 months as “Acting Manager” and running the store alone, I was made the permanent manager and the other Budtender was brought back, so a few days a week I can focus on paperwork and not need to do everything by myself. Which has really helped lower my stress level.

Upon a gaudy throne of gilded leaf -
A royal seat of richest ruby-red -
Within a world of wealth beyond belief -
A king named Midas sighed and shook his head.

Beneath a mountain made in Middle-Earth -
Before the finest treasures there possessed -
Surrounded by the boundless fount of worth -
A dragon woke and glanced around, depressed.

The royal sulked and sadly shivered cold -
The dragon roared a flash of fire and fog -
And each bemoaned their cherished stores of gold -

Same 13.9 BMI gang rise up!!!

But not too fast or you may fall back down due to health issues

Edit: since there is so much curiosity among the comments (and one person who understandably said I was lying) I've decided to update this, and include a picture of how skinny I look! (Hint it's not as bad as you're probably imagining) I'm 18 years old with a height of 5'11, and I weigh just under 100 pounds. Currently I just live an average life, with minor health issues such as nosebleeds, and occasional chest pains (although I haven't had any of these in months).

So here's proof I'm 13.9 BMI, note that this is my I.d card, and I got it 3 years ago, and I've grown slightly since then. please dont judge my feet.

Also note: my torso is skinny and small, but I dont feel comfortable putting an image of that on the internet.

Yes if I had another inch,
How jolly I would be!

Another inch is all you need -
Another inch is fine -
The life I know I'd like to lead
Would surely soon be mine!

And if I had another inch -

They sup and they sip from the faucet below -
They lick from the booty,
they lap from the butt -
They taste from the place where the sewages glut.

In Flint,
where the water would fester and stink -
They chanced on a fountain from which they could drink -
They kissed at the keister,

When Little Timmy made a date,
And spent the night with Jim -
He said: "how sweet it is, and great
To share some time with him!"

He'd heard that Jim was rather new
To copulation gay -
But Timmy taught him what to do
To while the night away.

And all was well for Tim, to wit -
He kneeled with hope and pride.

Alas, and then he felt the spit.

And Timmy fucking died.

#3228 – Suicide hotline operators, have you ever had calls where you thought help wouldn't reach your client in time? How did you come to terms with it?

[Serious]

I'd really appreciate it if instead of giving this post awards like this, you used that money and donate it to your local hotline. They're mostly run by volunteers, and the £4-5 you spent on Reddit coins would really help them out

/u/Axanxxtx

I worked at a SP hotline for about a year, and one call that comes to mind was when a caller said they didn't want to die alone but had already taken a lethal amount of pills. They said they were parked in a lot somewhere they wouldn't disclose and the only information I had to pass off to emergency services was their phone number. I felt so worried that information wouldn't be enough to get them helped in time, but once they hung up the call and wouldn't answer my calls back I realized, there was only so much that this person allowed me to do for them and I did absolutely everything I could with it. Being able to understand that brought me some peace. Knowing that I will be there as much as someone will let me and I'll do the best that I can with whatever is in my power and that's all we can do for others and that's all we can ask of ourselves.

/u/(deleted user)

Thank you, I feel much more at peace knowing that being at peace with doing everything I can, as opposed to being hung up over not being able to save someone or convince them otherwise is a much better way to think

At work I once complimented another man on his outfit. My male co-workers looked at me as if I had asked if he had naked photos of himself I could see.

/u/Knuckles316

Man, if I got a compliment unprompted like that, from a male or female, it would make my whole fucking month!

/u/Emperor-of-the-moon

This is why we gotta start normalizing men giving each other compliments. I STILL hold on to compliments from years ago

/u/Knuckles316

Same.

Actually, one of the best compliments I ever got (and probably the most recent one, sadly) was several years ago from my gay friend's boyfriend. He said my chest hair looked like the tree of life - which he meant in a complimentary way. As someone who was always self-conscious about being hairy (I'm very Italian) I damn near cried.

As the wife of a very hairy man, I must concur- it is the tree of life.

I'll admit that I was the perpetrator in this case. When I was veery young, like 8 or 9, I was convinced eating strawberries was kinda gay
Edit: all your comments made me realize we should probably have a poll and decide if strawberries are actually gay
Edit2: go on r/Isitgay and vote folks, someone did it

/u/PleasantBanana

Same here. When I was around 10, some friends of mine told made fun of me for liking strawberry Pop Tarts. Only girls and gays like strawberry-flavored anything, they said.

/u/IGrokData

Im straight, but if liking artificially flavored strawberry things is gay, then ima start sucking that dick.

/u/HypnagogicPope

I mean, if it's a strawberry flavored dick, I'm in.

/u/IGrokData

You suckin?

If it had a certain flavor -
If it supped a certain way -
Then it's certain I would savor,
And I'd certainly be gay.

I would lick the cock a little -
I would lap the balls between -
I would spend a bit of spittle
Or saliva
on the peen.

Yes I'd up and down the member
Every noon and every night -
From the spring-time to December,
With delectable delight!

So remember, if your wiener
Has a certain piquancy -
Then there's really no one keener Than this sausage-sucker:

me.

And some are inconstant,
And some never there.

Some parents are vicious.

And some leave you scarred.
Some parents are lazy,

What if time travelers already did this a number of times, killing a dozen or so worse-than-Hitlers in their infancy, before the machine broke down, or the temporal prime directive police caught up with them?

/u/LightinDarkness420

Or, what if the machine DIDN'T break, and after billions and trillions of test runs and trials... Hitler was the best case scenario..?

/u/fnordal

this is the most plausible scenario, btw.

If time travel will ever be possible, it will always have been possible.

And so, to make the worst possible quotable sentence "Hitler was not so bad"

/u/SpicyDad94

There's also a chance that it is so far in the future when it becomes available, that the Holocaust is just another sad story from history. Maybe there are thousands more attempted quasi-successful genocidal movements between here and then, scaling in the billions with an interplanetary population across space spanning trillions or quadrillions. Maybe in terms of scale, by the time time travel is discovered, if at all plausible, it is considered a relatively minor event like the Boston Massacre or the 1918 influenza. Where do they draw the line at what to prevent and when?

&#x200B;

Or, more likely, I would imagine, they don't want to impact a chain of causality ~that~ much, with that level of unpredictability for possible futures. Maybe they worry it creates a future where time travel is never invented, and they can't do anything about it. The farther we get from the event in question, the more widespread the consequences, I imagine a future society would rationalize with.

/u/Swallowingwallowing

/u/unusually_tiny_horse

I was a bully in middle school, and I can tell you that you won't get many good answers. People like me get that way because nobody is paying any attention. If nobody makes you feel good you do it yourself. And children aren't mature enough to do that properly. So they try to steal happiness from others. They'll put you down to feel good. That's why bullies break down if you beat them just once, their hand has slipped from the last string of control they had. It's not pleasant for anyone, and the longer it goes on, the more irreparable the damage becomes.

TLDR; pay attention to your kids, and show them the way of kindness by example

Not as extreme but sometimes the weather is nice outside and you want to feel real wind on your face. That also means said wind is going to be very loud while driving so your music needs to be louder. When the car stops at an intersection it sounds like I am a douche bag but I was really doing my own thing.

Note: I always sheepishly roll up my windows if it is too loud. If it is a little loud, I don't care enough to do that.

Edit: Again, slower this time... I never play my music loud enough to bother anyone anyway and I always turn up my windows if it is. I don't drive with the windows open on the highway - they also don't have intersections.. thought that'd be obvious.

/u/Octopus_420

Best way I can describe it is just a general feeling of security. Just knowing that they're behind you 100%, and even when they're mad at you it's almost always because they're trying to help you in the long run.

It's not something you really appreciate until you get older and start to notice kids around you that have to deal with some pretty fucked up shit from their parents. It's kind of slowly realizing how many bad things you've just never had to worry about thanks to your support system.

And, the best part is how your relationship changes as you get older. When they slowly start treating you like a fellow adult, and you get to see them as more of a whole person.

Let me see if I can get my old roommate to answer that

Very few people did know your actual name. The nickname came from me being very drunk and random people that lived in your dorm coming into your room and saying hi. I was 21 and in college. He was a classmate of mine. He seemed so charming and was easy on the eyes. One day I overheard him talking to his friends about how he doesn't date engineer women because math is for men.

Edit: Some people are missing the point here. It's not that he said he wouldn't want to date an engineer that bothered me, it's that he said that women aren't meant for math.

/u/yeetgodmcnechass

Sounds like a buddy of mine. Well, not entirely (he doesn't believe the last part about math being for men), but he wouldn't date someone who studies engineering, since he is also in the field.

I tell a lot of dad jokes while teaching and the kids always laugh (or groan-laugh). Early in my career I made the mistake of saying “jeez if only my partner found me this funny.” To which one of the mousy kids replied “maybe he would if you started grading him.”

Oof.

EDIT: Well, at least it got me some internet points. Too bad this was a few years back or I'd rub this gold in her smarmy little face. Who's funny now, Jenny? WHO'S FUNNY NOW?! (In case anyone's wondering, no, the kid's name was not Jenny. And also she was great and I miss her.)

At work, when in a somewhat heated discussion of why things kept going wrong at a small company, upper management said something to the effect ‘why does xyz keep happening, it’s idiot proof’ and I replied “we need to stop hiring new idiots to test if that’s true”

Edit: so the replies seem split about 50/50 understanding what I meant. I’d like to address a couple replies instead of individually. The context was “please stop trying to find people to actually test if it’s idiot proof. Please hire someone who is not a bigger idiot than the previous hire that was let go for being an idiot.”

First, I work in a very small company and all of us are close enough outside of work that this wouldn’t get me fired or reprimanded or anything .

Second, my point was that we should hire smarter people in instead of any Joe that applied and then the procedure would be idiot proof. We just needed a slightly smarter idiot. Thirdly, the Douglas Adams quote is what I had in mind when I said it, but I couldn’t remember at the time where I had heard it from. Thanks to those that reminded me.

I'd shaped a slur to sneer, to slay,
To seal his painful fate.

I knew the perfect words to say.

Assuming all the orgasm-haver needs to do is see and hear the finger guns, I'm getting on TV. Oh hey, local TV station, your viewers are about to have an awesome day. It starts small, but quickly spreads to regional and then national affiliates as the footage is linked to a spike in ER visits from elderly citizens with heart conditions.

By the end of the week, my first fingerbang is the highest viewed video on Pornhub. CNN runs a story warning of the danger of such power and questions whether I am a friend or foe. I spend some time on the run from the same scientists that sought ET for a time back in the 80s. I'm careful with my power now, but now and again I have to fingerbang someone into submission just to escape.

My exile from the real world is made worse when trolls across the internet use my first newscast as a new kind of Rickroll. uBlock Origin creates a specialized widget that censors my fingerblasting so that offices and schools can return to some kind of normalcy. A public health crisis is declared. Desperate for peace, I fingerblast myself. The euphoria lasts for 30 minutes.

Carl from Up. I'm still mind blown that Pixar was able to create such a compelling story that addressed grief and loss, the realization childhood dreams, being a father figure, and the search for meaning in life all into one animated movie. Edit: WOW, first gold! Thank you kind stranger!!!

/u/TannedCroissant

If we're saying Pixar count as cartoons then I'd like to say Joy from Inside Out. She believed success was about always being happy and that Sadness was an annoyance that shouldn't be there. Whilst she was kind of right, she learnt how being sad can make happy times so much more poignant and create a fuller, deeper personality with more meaningful moments.

Of course there's an argument that BingBong had a stronger arc where he turned from constant fun to self sacrifice but I don't think I'm emotionally strong enough to think about that right now.

I don't know if this counts but I'm a huge fan of 90s rock. Korn, Slipknot, Seether, Mushroomhead, etc. Anyways I've ALWAYS wanted to see Marilyn Manson in concert and he was opening for I think one of the mentioned bands above a few years back.

Anyways, he comes on and just looked horrible, kind of slurring but whatever I get it. So like 4 songs in he starts singing "Beautiful People" and mostly everyone seemed in to it. Well maybe bc it's TX and it was an outdoor venue over 100 degrees but he just goes, "fuck it, y'all suck" and walks off stage. Took a few seconds to register with every one he wasn't joking and every starts booing and cussing. I was legit excited and it just turned to garbage so quick.

Edit: Thanks for the guild!

/u/MilkyLikeCereal

Funny enough I had a similar experience with Manson at a festival. He slurred his way through about two songs, while falling all over the stage, before he just wandered off and never came back. As it was a festival we had another act to go so people weren't too upset. But it was very strange.

/u/tiger9910

Surely there are legal repercussions for doing this sorta bs?

/u/thathappyhippie

It's Manson, you're lucky if you get a full set out of him at all.

/u/nderhjs

Yep, he's part of the club that don't give shits. I've been burned by him, Lauryn Hill, and Madonna. All short, late sets.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]

He looked at his fans, who had paid to be there -
And simply decided he just didn't care.
He stared with disdain at the crowd out in front.
He bent to the mic and he said:

” ... I'm a cunt.”

#3182 – What's the fastest you've seen a crowd go from excited to horrified?

/u/FrankSonata

I saw this on YouTube somewhere. A bodybuilder was strutting his stuff in front of a crowd, warming them up and everything at an event. They absolutely loved it—many people had attended just to see him. He was at his peak, huge muscles and sculpted physique, absolutely amazing (I don't personally like the bodybuilding look but you've gotta respect hard work).

The crowd was cheering him and he got so pumped up, so full of energy and emotion that instead of just walking onto the stage he did an impromptu jump-flip. He launched himself high into the air and did this impressive flip. The crowd went berserk.

But he was a bodybuilder, not a gymnast. He landed on his neck and died instantly, crumpling on the spot. It is one of the most horrific, sudden and unexpected things I've ever seen.

Maybe the worst part was not all of the crowd realised immediately. They kept smiling and cheering for their hero for another minute before it sank in that they had just witnessed him die right in front of them and they were clapping for a dead man.

Pink Floyd often would have giant floating pigs released during the concert, you know inflatable balloons. This would happen like half way through the show. Well people are smoking tons of pot, drinking, doing god knows what other drugs, so by the time the pig is released it's basically like god descending from the heavens. People were losing their shit at the pig. Well it got caught in one of the wires and caught on fire. You've never seen so many stoners fall to their knees in terror/fear/sorrow over the death of a giant inflatable pig. There is no god anymore, his bacon got fried.

When Little Timmy saw the pig
Come floating from on high -
He cast his eyes around the gig,
And cried a noble cry -

”’Twas God himself,” the lad remarked,
”Who made this come to be!”
And in his heart, the embers sparked.

He dropped upon a knee.

He softly thanked the lord above,
And with a sigh of joy -
He watched the pig with eyes of love,
And fondness filled the boy.

And caught inside its swiney spell,
He wept with hope and pride.

Alas, the piggy burned and fell.

And Timmy fucking died.

/u/brucatlal1

I think that's the problem with big foot, it's that he IS blurry. That makes him even scarier, we have a large, out of focus monster roaming the countryside. - mitch hedberg paraphrased. Love that guy lol

/u/DatDudefromWI

I was watching Home Movies on HBO Max last week, and noticed he voiced one of the guest characters. I hadn't heard any of his standup when I first watched the show about 10 years ago, so I didn't recognize the voice then. Picked up on it right away this time. An incredibly funny dude. RIP, Mitch!

The problem with bigfoot -
the issue with he -
He's so fucking terribly awkward to see!
He roams through the thick of a forest at night -
And makes for the shakiest, shadowy sight.

The problem with bigfoot -
the issue with him -
He walks through the trees in the darkness and dim.
And though he's all massive and hairy and tall -
He rarely makes time for a picture at all.

The problem with bigfoot -
the issue with it -
The central conundrum,
I have to admit -
The thing with this mountain, this fountain of fur -
He's clearly... and plainly...
and simply...

... a blur.

He complained about how there are too many “poofers” at his current job in retail. I asked him to repeat himself and he laughed and said “well you know what they’re like”. You should have seen the look on when I told him I was gay and I didn’t think he would be a good fit for the company. It’s been 10 years but its so depressing to think people think exposing their prejudice at an interview will help them.

“I have to leave my job,” said he -
”It’s simply full of poofs, you see!
And everywhere I go by day,
I find myself beside a gay!

“You have to understand,” he said,
And sighed aloud and shook his head -
”It’s not that I’m a bigot, bro -
I just don’t want them here, you know?”

“I want a job in someplace where
I’m not obliged to feel or care
For someone else’s point of view -
Does that seem much to ask to you?”

And when I told him where to go,
He looked confused and left with woe,
Surprised to find us parting ways.

Oh well.

I’m sure he’ll blame the gays.

I was once in a similar situation. I dated a sweet guy. But honestly, "sweet" is subjective. He was a gentleman, but he INSISTED on ALWAYS opening the car door for me (he literally would not let me touch the car handle, like at all), letting me eat first ALWAYS (instead of both at the same time cause honestly it's not a biggie for me), commented that I should never cut my hair, etc...

I felt like I was with a man from the 50s. It was draining to be treated "like a queen" instead of an equal. Other than that, he was okay.

Anyways, when I broke up with him, I felt like he didn't want to let me go. Like I had to explain over and over again that I wasn't feeling it and that he deserved someone that would feel the same way about him.

He hung up the phone with, "you don't know what you missed out on."

... Mmmm... Okay, I guess...

When the warning label on something reads IN-FLAMMABLE it means that it's highly flammable (it will burn easily) - not otherwise.

/u/swifchif

Flammable and inflammable are synonyms. This is a primary example of the stupidity of the English language.

/u/nopantsdota

thats so stupid what the fuck

/u/weltschmerz__

Apparently it's because "inflammable" was derived from a Latin word. From this:

That would make sense—if inflammable had started out as an English word. We get inflammable from the Latin verb inflammare, which combines flammare (“to catch fire”) with a Latin prefix in-, which means “to cause to.” This in- shows up occasionally in English words, though we only tend to notice it when the in- word is placed next to its root word for comparison: impassive and passive, irradiated and radiated, inflammate and flame. Inflammable came into English in the early 1600s.

Things were fine until 1813, when a scholar translating a Latin text coined the English word flammable from the Latin flammare, and now we had a problem: two words that look like antonyms but are actually synonyms. There has been confusion between the two words ever since.

/u/SVenetor

George Carlin: (and I’m paraphrasing here) “Flammable, inflammable and noninflammable. Why are there 3? Seems like two ought to be able to cover that concept. Either the thing flams or it doesn’t flam.”

/u/PhoenixStar

Nobody tell him about “nonflammable”

A friend of mine -
let's call him Jim -
He does not flam,
he does not flim -
And even though you'd think he would -
He is not,
will not,
does no good.

He does not flim -
he does not flam -
He says, "no matter what I am -
I will not flam -
I will not flim -
I will not both,
for I am Jim."

A friend of mine -
let's call him Jim -
He does not flam,
he does not flim -
And though I try each day and night -

The count of Monte Cristo. A fantastic tale of revenge and if it's worth it.

/u/DevoidAxis

I completely agree, this book is always a top recommend. The story of ultimate revenge is beautiful and sad. It will leave you just as broken as the characters in the book, and I love it for for it.

What is revenge, if not the equal act?
A chance to smooth again a crooked line.
A deal you make with you yourself, a pact -
And what's the right for such a wrong as mine?

A secret knife begets another knife -
A shrouded sin begins another sin -
A stalled or stolen life deserves a life -
Defeated, cheated kin an act akin.

And though you call revenge the poisoned cup -
The dark for which you open up the door -
I'd lift the chalice near my lips to sup -
And drown the world for all it did before.

I dug two graves too vast and great to flee.

And one's for you -
the other one's for me.

My grandma was in hospital for some unrelated issue, some random doctor walks by, stops, and asks her if she always had a nose and lips that big.

At first she got really mad, because he was so direct, but after he explained he was writing a research paper about acromegaly, a rare form of a brain tumor, and recognised the symptoms with her.

Fair enough, after a check up they found the tumor, removed it, and now my grandma still well over ten years later is part of that research paper

/u/sanmateomary

I went to an endocrinologist about a benign tumor on my pituitary. The doctor seemed arrogant and dismissive and was really getting me angry, so I starting using my hands a lot, gesturing in my frustration. He stopped me and looked at my hands. Then he told me to take off my shoes and socks so he could look at my feet. He said “do you have carpal tunnel? Do you snore? Do you have oily skin?” Yes, yes and yes. None of those seemed related or bothersome. He said “yeah you have acromegaly, that tumor is secreting growth hormone, you have to get it removed.”

Thank goodness for annoying doctors.

/u/CactusCustard

Holy shit is your Doctor House?

/u/bros402

I went to a doctor like House, you do not want to see a doctor like House.

Edit: Okay, everyone is asking about it. I am going to leave some information out for privacy.

This doctor, let's call him Dr. House, is a world renowned hematologist-oncologist. So I have a very rare leukemia - the specific kind has a 1 in 5 million incidence rate in the US, 90% of cases are a certain subtype - "T", 5-10% are the "NK" subtype. My local oncologist, great guy, suspected I had the NK subtype - but he had never seen this cancer before. He told me to see Dr. House, because he was the best and would be able to confirm it.

So I scheduled an appointment to see Dr. House, who runs his own clinic at a well known hospital - the second he steps into the room, you can tell he is smart and that he knows it. He has that kind of comportment. He steps in after his fellow evaluates me, and starts rapid firing things at me (words, not objects). After that barrage, he ends the appointment by going "okay, we're gonna do a bone marrow biopsy. I'll see you next time."

I ask him "Okay, when do you want me to get it?"

Him: "right now, i'll go get the kit. Or you can go get some lunch and come back."

Now for those of you who have never had a bone marrow biopsy, they hurt. They suck a lot more when the doctor refuses to prescribe anything outside of lidocaine to numb the area (especially when lidocaine does not work well on you). So after I stop having a panic attack and am ready for the BMB, one of my parents tells the nurses, and gets the doctor. He comes in, starts numbing the area, uses a vial of lidocaine, and I am numb enough. Then in the middle of the BMB, he says "Huh? That's odd."

Three words you never want to hear when a guy has a needle in your hip.

He didn't believe me that with my previous BMB, that I was a "dry tap" - when they are unable to draw any liquid bone marrow. He told me that the person who did it at my local oncologist "must've sucked at it" because "[he] always gets it out of his patients."

So, painful experience later, I ask him to write a script for some pain pills, because as I am sure you can imagine, getting a bone marrow biopsy (which also involves getting a core sample, aka a ~1.5 cm chunk of marrow out of bone) is very painful. Getting bone pain pills is standard procedure with a bone marrow biopsy. He looks right at me and says

"You don't need anything. My patients never have pain after my biopsies, take some tylenol tonight if you hurt, but you'll be fine in the morning!"

I was in pain for two weeks. I got pain meds later that day from my local oncologist - only needed them during the day for a week, then a few days after that to make sure I slept through the night.

I also have autism, cerebral palsy, and I have underdeveloped muscles (I can lift ~10 lbs for maybe 5 seconds on a good day) - every single appointment, Dr. House would ask me why I was so skinny and why I didn't work out at the gym like he did (my immune system was compromised - for any medical professionals, my absolutely neutrophil count was at 200). He would also be like "just go to the gym, start off with something light, do 20 reps of 20 lbs 3x, it's super easy."

He'd also comment on me having my parents there for emotional support, even though I was 24 and I fucking had cancer.

So, after all of those tests, we go back a week and a half later. After waiting for 5 hours (a mix of waiting room and exam room), he walks into the door and says "So it's rarer than we thought! It's incurable, but treatable!"

Turns out I have both subtypes of this super rare cancer.

I'm gonna skip over a bunch of stuff, including the time he and his staff prescribed me medications that I shouldn't have been prescribed because I have epilepsy, and jump to the time I saw the doctor who literally discovered the cancer I have. I saw this guy and he was amazing - he called both of my oncologists to talk to them. My local oncologist talked to him for like an hour, exchanged emails with him. Dr. House? Didn't return his phone call until I asked him to at my next appointment. He also refused to ask the doctor who discovered my cancer for his opinion on my treatment, even when I was having severe side effects.

tl;dr RL Dr. Houses's are arrogant af, but if someone I knew was having trouble figuring out some kind of hematological issue, I would refer them to him in a minute, then tell them to see someone else after they got the diagnosis pinned down.

Edit 2: I just remembered another thing he did - more "arrogant rich dude" than "Dr. House," but hey. So during the bone marrow biopsy, he was chatting me up. He asks me "So this summer i'm going to China, Israel, and Switzerland, gonna see a lot of stuff in between conferences and presentations and consulting. What's your favorite country you have been to?"

I say "I haven't been out of the country."

He says "Oh no, not this year, it can be whenever!"

I say "I have never been out of the country, it is expensive."

He says "oh."

and doesn't talk for pretty much the rest of the bone marrow biopsy. He apparently looked at my parents after I said "I haven't been out of the country" with a questioning look.

Your nose and your lips are exceedingly large -
As wide as a schooner, as big as a barge."

He looked at her hard and he looked at her long:
"I'm certain there's something remarkably wrong.
With features as funny and strange to the eye -
There has to be something," he said with a sigh.

"I think it's a tumor, most likely of all -

It isn't a tumor.

The pastor of a small town church insisted that members set up the parish hall and provide food and beverages for 125 people after every Sunday service, even though the average attendance was only around 20 people.

Week after week, month after month, much food would be disposed of and large urns of coffee dumped down the sink - and all because the pastor was in denial about the reality of weekly attendance.

Talk about them. Reminisce about the times spent with them. Allow myself to be sad that they're gone.

My best friend died in 2015. I miss her a lot.

EDIT: Holy shit, I did not expect to wake up to such a response to my comment. Thank you for the awards, the kind words about my loss, and additional words of support, advice, solidarity and shared loss.

/u/thebestatheist

That last sentence is really important, IMO. Allowing yourself to miss them and feel sad is definitely helpful for me.

Edit to reply to some: there is no wrong way to grieve, provided you're not harming yourself or others. Feelings are the reason we exist; happiness, joy, exhilaration, love, all these things make life worth living. And sadness is part of that. Feeling sadness isn't being weak. It's just part of being alive.

When the stars shimmer down, and the moon's passing

When the summer-wind skips, when it blows in the

I'll remember your touch by the feel of the breeze.

When the clouds disappear, like it was here before -
When the white-breakers break, and the tide meets the

When the rain tumbles down onto still, silver lakes -

I'll remember your smile in the ripples it makes.

When the stars fade to dawn -

When the summer-wind carries the rainclouds away -
When the tide travels in, and the sunlight has set -

I will miss you forever,

/u/LiberateJohnDoe

Miss them.

Feel, grieve, cry. Know that the grief is the other side of love, expressing how much you value the deceased, and bringing them alive in you.

Thank them, talk about them, talk to them, learn more from your memories of them.

Say their name. Gather with others to remember them.

Wish them well and invite them to move on.

You also have the option to not assume they are 'gone'. Conservation of energy is a fundamental law of nature. Continuation of consciousness can be verified throughout life.

Sane societies don't assume beings are merely material. In fact, the material aspect is the least real, the most changeable and ephemeral. You can verify this for yourself: the average person eats between 35 and 55 tons of food in a lifetime; the body is constantly changing, changing, changing; but the witnessing awareness has always been there, stable, unaging. The 'I' who saw the Grand Canyon at seven years old and the 'I' who experiences New York City at sixty-five are the same. That awareness has not aged; it is like an ageless mirror or movie screen upon which the whole story of life unfolds.

Finally, you can use the energy of missing and the poignancy of your memory of the deceased to better wake up to and understand your own impermanence and certain death. You can take steps to live well, and completely, today (not assuming that even another day will be guaranteed to you or your loved ones) and prepare to die a good death rather than one avoided, rejected, feared as if it's a tragic surprise.

Thank them, talk about them, talk to them, learn more from your memories of them...

Chef Boyardee beefaroni. One summer, because I was hella bored, I bought some chef Boyardee beefaroni and put it in my friend’s mailbox as a prank. He didn’t find it but his parents did, and they asked their neighbors who did it. He suspected me at first, but I managed to get him off of my tail. Now our neighborhoods were fairly close to eachother, so I could be over there in a 50 minute walk. Every night, I walked up to their neighborhood (walking anywhere at 2:am is creepy as hell but the Boyardee bandit does not stop for demons) and put a can of beefaroni inside their mailbox. After about a month, they call the police to find out who’s putting beefaroni in their mailbox. Luckily the police really didn’t care that much and just told them to get a camera which they eventually did. Meanwhile my friend is telling me all of this from his perspective, right, so I usually know what they do before I strike. So I start covering my face, and pretend to hunch over. I have no idea where this camera is, so I can never be too careful. They call the cops again and give them a profile, and now the cops are looking for a crippled beefaroni bandit. After a solid 3 months of this shit, one of the baggers at the store gets word somehow, and starts getting suspicious because he sees me buying tons of beefaroni. He confronts me, I tell him the truth, and I shit you not he starts helping me beefaroni my friend’s house. We’re putting it all over hiding it in the lawns, porch, fence, you name it. Halloween rolls around, and I dress up as chef Boyardee. I go to my friends house and say “your daily subscription to Chef Boyardee beefaroni has ended. Would you like to renew?”. I hear laughter in the background, and it’s the store clerk. Turns out he recently started dating best friend's sister, and that's how he heard. Truth be told, I don't think I've ever been punched harder than when my friend found out. Good times. We still laugh about it from time to time.

TLDR. Bought and hid chef Boyardee beefaroni for nearly half a year around my best friend's house. The Beefaroni bandit strikes again!

/u/MrKathooloo

Dude. If I could give platinum I would. That is hands down one of the funniest comments I have ever read in my whole time being on Reddit. I'm kind of tempted to try it myself as my friend has a camera on his house and has a sense of humor plus I think it would make him feel better because we haven't seen each other for a while. Props to you for doing that.

/u/BoardingPanth

It's from an old AskReddit thread about talking dirty
"Not me, but an old friend of mine.

Really quiet, soft-spoken, polite guy. A total gentleman and a graduate student in the liberal arts. Also, pretty inexperienced, tentative, and vanilla sexually.

He's dating this really cool girl for maybe two months. She is much kinkier in bed. She floats the idea of dirty talk, and apparently likes to be objectified, even demeaned a bit, from time to time. He's hesitant, but wants to please her and doesn't dismiss the idea outright. Changes the subject and figures that they'll revisit the idea another time.

Anyway... they have sex a few days later for the first time since the conversation. Really going at it doggystyle, and she tells him to talk dirty to her. He says that he can't think of anything to say, so he says nothing, and she then repeats the request, but the second time she is not fucking requesting, but demanding it.

He comes up with: "Yeah... you like that, you fucking retard?"

He's never struck me as one for embellishment, so I believe him. He said that was it for sex that night, although they are still together two years on now."

I didn’t listen and said it again that night, and he took a piece of fresh dog poop and made me hold it on my tongue for 30 seconds.

I cried. And never cursed again until I was 21.

/u/SafeParamedic6

That’s what I told him. He felt bad even as he was doing it, but he said that he never lied, and when he made a promise he had to follow through on it.

I told him it wasn’t safe and he said “we just had [the dog] checked for diseases and parasites, you’re going to be ok, I hate to do this but if you really want that word in your mouth, you need the real thing.”

Honestly that’s messed up. Not even the punishment, but the extreme reaction to swearing. Everyone swears. You’re in for a world of shock when you enter the real world if you’re anti-swearing. It’s a word

He felt bad even as he was doing it, but he said that he never lied, and when he made a promise he had to follow through on it.

Definitely the “Buck Rag.” I still feel sick thinking about it. For those who don’t know, a Buck Rag is a rag that’s been rubbed all over a male goat in rut. It’s used for some goat breeding purposes (lady goats love the smell).

In our town, some parents would buy these rags from goat farmers to punish children for misbehaving. You take the child out back, pull the rag out of the jar, drape it over the child’s face, and tie a knot in the back. It’s not dangerous, but it makes them smell the horrible goat odor.

I never saw what the big deal was until I was “Buck ragged” as a 16 year old girl for cursing out my parents. I puked. A lot.

Themselves

“Poem for a Friend”

I know that I don't always see you enough -
With work and with kids and a marriage, it's tough.
You wake and you take it by dawn and by day -
And noon turns to evening, and time slips away.

“We'll have to do something,” we said when we met -
But you and me, brother, we tend to forget.
We're working - we're busy -
we both try our best -
And life doesn't always leave room for the rest.

But then, with a smile, I remember it's you.
We say that we'll meet, and eventually do.
You're there when I need you, and that doesn't end.
So buddy, be seeing you ...

maybe.

Your friend.

/u/hasslesass

Hey something I can finally answer! Not me but my good friend and room mate fell into the flat earth black hole while in university. Started out as a joke but then he just fell into it more and more.

Eventually I challenged him to do an experiment to figure it out ourselves. We went to opposite ends of a big inlet - bay. He had calculated the supposed curvature of the earth and figured out that from the distance between us me at one end and him at the other we should have a few metres of water between us. We both took some powerful green lasers that he had smuggled back from China in years past. While on the phone I would shine my laser somewhat into the air, watching to avoid plains and helicopters, then now that he could see me he would shine his laser up into the sky and slowly lower it until it disappears or just me. If it hit me, the earth was possibly flat. Well it disappeared 3 or so metres above my head every time. He accepted it and we moved on besides a brief time where he thought it was refracted from the water

“And now our experiment's come to an end -
You have to agree that it's certain, my friend.
The world isn't level -
the Earth isn't flat -
The planet's a spheroid and that's simply that.”

He looked at me, sadly.
He looked all around.
He looked at the sky, the horizon, the ground.
He looked at the world just as blue as could be.

He looked at me, sadly.

He whispered: "... I see.”

And later that night as he lay in his room -
He thought of what happened and frowned in the gloom.

He turned with a sigh of dismay on his bed.

There's no Wybie in the book either, so Coraline is doing this all herself.

/u/peeledraspberry

/u/yeahwellokay

I was a raging alcoholic in my twenties and thought I would never recover from it. I never found a real job using my first degree or my masters. Part of it was because I was always drunk, part of it was the job market at the time.

I went back to school in my thirties and found something I like a whole lot more. Now, I'm married, nearly ten years sober, and have a great job.

My point is, if you end up on the wrong path or don't like where you are, there's always time to turn around and change it. Too many people just assume they're stuck where they are and stuck with the issues they have.

/u/peeledraspberry

This is soo important. Thank you for the reminder. I'm glad you were able to turn things around!

My point is, if you end up on the wrong path or don't like where you are, there's always time to turn around and change it.

Though mainly and mostly together in mind -
With hope for ahead and at peace with behind -
In essence and earnest, I have to confide:
I'm still not for certain I know who's inside.

But that's what's amazingly freeing to try -
Perhaps there just isn't a definite "I".
And if I'm unhappy or troubled with "me" -
Then maybe it's someone I don't have to be .

I guess you decide for how long, or how far -
And if it's not working, you change who you are.
If "me" isn't certain, and "me" isn't set -

Then changing is easy.

I'm not finished yet.

/u/peeledraspberry

/u/MellisaHoey

Get a regular exercise routine going and stick to it like your quality of life depends on it, because it does.

/u/lordnecro

I exercised a lot in my early 20's, then stopped. After having a kid while in my mid 30's, I am trying to get back into shape and doing a lot of weight lifting. I can't believe I stopped for so many years.

Find an exercise you like. I hated treadmills and bikes, but love my rowing machine because I can watch tv. I didn't really like home gyms, but I am enjoying doing an entire routine with a barbell. It is way easier to keep up exercising if you find something you enjoy (or at least don't hate). I also used a 1-on-1 trainer (until quarantine started) who pushed me and kept me motivated. Expensive, but it was totally worth it for me.

/u/geoffh2016

"Find an exercise you like" is key - but also to lower your threshold. In my 20s, I ran marathons. At some point, if I couldn't get a 30-45 minute run in, I wouldn't get out the door.

Some exercise is always better than no exercise - and one that you like is exercise that you'll stick with for the long term.

/u/DeadInTheCrypt

This is me right now. So many 3-4 mile runs turned down just cause I was planning more and didn't have the time.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]

For years and for years,
I have worked on my shape -
I've made no excuses, evasions, escape.
I've trained and I've strained and I've struggled for this -

And not an occasion I've chosen to miss.

I've worked on my body -
I've worked on my form -
I've worked with a purpose to challenge the norm!
I've slogged and I've slaved and I've labored and found

My mission is over.

I'm perfectly round.

I think Skinny Elbow Fuckface would fit in just fine in the UFC and I'd love to hear Jon Anik say it with complete poise and professionalism.

When Little Timmy clicked a thread
And read the words therein -
"I'll have to start a fight," he said,
"For now I'm sure to win!

"I've learned to throw a punch or two -

I've read exactly what to do!"
He said with deep delight.

And so he grabbed his lines and lists -
He chose his foe with pride.
He checked his notes and raised his fists.

And Timmy fucking died.

/u/EscapingHeavens

My friend has had it happen twice to him. Both heart related in restaurants. Was able to use a defibrillator to save ones life and the other unfortunately passed. Defibrillators don't work if the heart is completely stopped, and cpr is a long shot and didn't work in this case.

/u/Losernoodle

What is it about restaurants? I witnessed someone legitimately choking in a restaurant years ago.

A friend with me used to provide fist aid training including CPR and Heimlich. 5 seconds after the lady's daughter screamed for help, a guy was already trying the Heimlich. My friend was by his side and talking him through it since he wasn't trained (just a Good Samaritan).

It seemed like it took forever for EMS to arrive. They took the choking lady out to the ambulance and stayed in the parking lot for several minutes.

I took this to be a bad sign. Was told later the food was far enough down that it had to be surgically removed. The lady didn't survive.

I think about it now and then. Hope your friend is doing OK.

EDIT: I meant first aid, but fist aid is too funny to change!

EDIT 2: I'm getting a lot of comments about the way I worded this. Just to clarify: the choking part makes sense, but I've seen several stories about heart attacks in restaurants. Not to mention knife attacks. I was trying to ask, "what is it about restaurants that involve tragedy/death?"

/u/GIVER-OF-WILL

Not chewing enough, talking as they're eating (suckling air in) means big chunks of food get sucked into the windpipe and lodged there.

/u/Losernoodle

It's fucking terrifying to me. I can't count how many times I've been in a hurry and just scarfed something down alone in the car. I could easily choke (definitely had a few scares). Not that I want to die, but it's worse to think I might hurt someone else.

/u/gives_justice_boners

Same. I've actually choked a few times from eating too fast. Like full blown, I have one chance to cough or I'll pass out, situation. Coughed so hard my chest and back hurt for a week.

/u/kickaguard

I once almost choked to death on a piece of bacon. I was at that "one my cough before I pass out" point. But instead of coughing, instinct kicked in and I uncontrollably inhaled as hard as possible. The chunk of bacon just got inhaled. I wonder if it's still in there.

/u/AlessandroGaleotti

my father (doctor) 30 years ago was sent to work in southern Italy (although he already lived with my mother in the North) and a large part of the salary ended up in tickets to return by plane every weekend. the fact is that during the flight to the south (lasting about 1 hour) they do not give anything to eat except they pass with a trolley to give candies... needless to say:the classic situation of the old woman who chokes on it and cannot breathe . My dad was called and with a few heavy blows on the back he managed to get the candy out of the poor old woman. A week goes by and the day of the return on the plane comes, the trolley with the candies passes promptly and out of nowhere a girl sitting in front of my father who was trying to get one is blocked by her friend: “don’t take it, last week they told me that an old woman got choked up and to free her a doctor had to slap her really really hard on the back!”.

/u/i_fuckin_luv_it_mate

I like the thought of an Italian flight where everyone panics, but they find a doctor, and he assesses the situation very carefully and he chooses not to use the Heimlich maneuver, but instead of that, professionally elects to slap her on the back, but like really hard.

I had to do 4 rounds of CPR before I felt a pulse again and it was right as the emts were walking in. I work in nursing

Not Human Resources but my first job was for a circulation desk in the library my mother works at, since she works there she was able to get me the job. One of the pieces of work I had to do was delete deceased clients from the system. I had to look up all these names and check if they had any outstanding fees or books that needed returned, and if they didn't then I would delete them from the system. The system hadn't been cleaned in a while, because there were accounts that hadn't been active since the 70s, but there were also accounts that were used just a week ago, all of which had the owner pass away. I tried to just do the work and not think about the morbidity but it was odd.

/u/basto

What did you do if they did have outstanding fees or unreturned books?

/u/canihaveasquash

I worked at an academic library and had to freeze accounts for deceased and missing students and external users, we just removed the books from the catalogue and asked the collections team to order a replacement. Fees were wiped off and address on the account changed to our own to ensure no notifications went to the deceased families. Sometimes families would get in touch if they found the books to ask about returning them, but we always insisted that they only needed to do so for their own benefit and when they were ready to as we didn't want to rush them. Didn't have to do it often but we always tried to do the best we could.

You were here.

Just a moment ago, you were here.

You'd dreams and ambitions.
You'd sadness and cheer.
You'd thoughts and you'd feelings,
a hope in your heart -
And things that you'd finished - and things that you'd start.

You were here.

Just a moment ago, you were here.

You'd things you kept secret,
and things you held dear.
You'd places you'd been,
and you wanted to be -
And things that you'd witnessed - and things that you'd see.

You'd thoughts for the future, tomorrow, today.
You'd things in your head you were planning to say.
And plans for a present that just carried on.

Just a moment ago, you were here.

Now you're gone.

#3128 – People who work in Human Resources, what is the weirdest shit you have seen?

2020-05-05 14:27:14

/u/Dankuser2020

/u/shepanator

I used to work in HR at a large corporation.

There was a big HR back-office team doing a lot of processing and data entry including employee's bank info for their salary. It just so happened that on the same day two employees with the same name started, and a huge clusterfuck ensued.

First the banking information was entered for the wrong person, one of them realised and had it corrected, but the other wasn't fixed so both salaries went to one person

The unpaid guy started refusing to come to work, but payroll said that the payment cleared and the account was in his name, so he was terminated for refusing to come to work.

He kept calling and the HR support team kept misidentifying him as the other guy who was still working for us, so when they raised a ticket to get his bank information changed they changed the info of the wrong guy, so now the guy who doesn't work for us is getting paid the salary of a guy who does.

When this was finally worked out the first guy was given his job back, but on his first day back security misidentified him and issued him a badge of the other employee, so now he was clocking hours for the other guy and not getting paid again because he never clocked in for himself.

It took about 3 months for all this to be worked out. Moral of the story is use a fucking email address to identify people &#x200B;

edit: yes the employees had unique ids, the problem was people were searching for them by name & tunnel visioning on the first result. Also I was suggesting the email can be used to identify people face-to-face or over the phone, I wasn't suggesting it should be used as the primary key in a database

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)

Moral of the story is use a fucking email address to identify people.

“Is it him,
or is it he?
Is it I,
or is it me?
Is it you yourself, or you?
Does a one and one make two?

“Is it man, or is it men?
Which,” he said,
”is which again?
What,” he said,
”has gone amiss?
Who is that,
and who is this?

“Oh, please tell me if you can -
How I right the mistook man?
How I split alike the same?
How I halve a whole full name?

“Though I’ve tried I have to say -
No, alas there is no way!
No, there’s nothing else to do!

... guess we’ll have to fire the two.”

I am SOOOO glad I had my teenage years in the late eighties & early nineties before the internet, let alone social media. Back then I couldn't get a date, let alone a girlfriend. I was, to be fair, hardly a catch, suffering from persistent depressive disorder (form an orderly queue ladies!) and just generally having problems adapting. I was acknowledged to be a bit weird. I kind of accepted that it was my "fault" - which was bad for me short term but probably good (in the long term) for everyone concerned. Ultimately I had to sort myself out. But if I had had access to the sort of Incel shite online around today, I fear I would have lapped it up with a spoon. A very large group of like minded people telling me it isn't my fault?!?! I can stop moping and start hating? Fantastic! I'm in! I would have been able to celebrate my status instead of reflecting on it and changing it. I'm sure I'd have been more than tempted.

Social media has eroded, even destroyed, the concepts of privacy Gen X and before took for granted. For us to be an outsider, to be weird, was something you could do alone and grow out of - if you wanted to of course. For the later millennials and beyond, even in quarantine, there is no alone, no solitude to reflect. Everything seems to be out there looking for likes and other forms of validation my addled mid 40s brain can't comprehend. Incels are a form of social validation that could not really have existed before social media. To get a network like that going would have been logistically and technically impossible on a scale beyond small outsider cliques in secondary schools. Now they are a movement. I somewhat pity Incels because, but for 20 or so years, I could have been one of them.

/u/VeshWolfe

I honestly think social media is allowing the development of a whole Pandora's Box of mental illnesses. Some are derivations of previously understood mental illnesses, while other are just being recognized, like gaming addiction.

The lack of privacy is something that bothers me too. Like I'm 31, I grew up in the 90s and early 00s. In those days on the internet, the rule was you didn't share intimate details about your life or even your name, etc unless you trust them after a long period of time, and even then it was a grey area. Now? People post every innate detail about their lives and careers online, not just for family and friends, but complete strangers to approve of.

/u/stlcardinals527

I was just contemplating this exact thought several days ago - the internet of the 90's and early 00's was almost completely different than what it is now.

Now that there are more studies coming out showing the negative effects of long-term social network engagement (links to depression, for one), I wonder what aspects of the internet we will be as a society will look back on with regret. It's weird to think how engrained the Internet is into every aspect of our lives and being. We upload so much personal data into the web (consciously or not) every single day. Most people have jobs that are considerably aided by the Internet in some way shape or form. When do we stop using the Internet to live our lives?

/u/slfnflctd

This is almost entirely the advertising industry's fault. Particularly Google and Facebook.

Google used to actually suggest that everyone use an anonymous handle. Overnight, that suddenly changed, and one day, you were now supposed to use your real identity everywhere. Why? Better targeted advertising, massive tsunamis of cash for them.

It ruined everything.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 1

| When do we stop using the Internet to live our lives?

I could quit it in a minute -
I could turn the other cheek -
I could visit what was in it
And then close it for a week -
I have heeded what it's hosted -
I have noticed every thread -
I have pondered what was posted,
What was written,
what was said -
I have found the beast and fed it,
And there's nothing left to say -
So I'll bid goodbye to reddit.

Maybe later.

Not today.

#3126 – People who had considered themselves “incels” (involuntary celibates) but have since had sex, how do you feel looking back at your previous self?

/u/DannyMThompson

/u/TheWaystone

I'm good friends with a guy who used to be a part of a popular incel website, and he used to post on reddit, that's actually how we "met."

He is still growing a lot as a person. He was incredibly angry. He blamed being "ugly" for his failure with women, and nothing anyone said could convince him that it wasn't that, it was that he thought that he would only be happy with a "really hot" girl.

We hung out once and were talking about how he wanted to approach women out with us - we were at a very nice place and the neighborhood had plenty of high-maintenance women, you know the kind wearing expensive athleisure and who spent their entire lives dieting and doing spinning classes. Expensive hair and nails, all that. Women who were REALLY dedicated to looking good. There were also the girls that worked there, and a few other customers about our age. He literally only saw the "hot" ladies. He was upset they'd never date anyone like him - someone who has pretty much no career ambition, doesn't want to "conform" by dressing or eating like they do, etc. And the average women in there just... weren't women to him. It was really dehumanizing, because I saw him as an equal, and although he was sort of my friend, he didn't see me as human as he saw the "hot" ladies in lululemon.

He eventually saw a therapist. Actually, a few therapists. It was mostly to tell people he'd done it, but he stuck with it. Saw a few until one worked. And he started working on himself. We texted, emailed, etc. Hung out a few times, but honestly he wasn't working too hard on making friends, because he'd constantly say stuff that was belittling or mean just to hurt me or women in general, because he could. He also had spent TOO MUCH time in "black pill" subreddits, because he brought it up on the one time I invited him out with my trivia team.

A few months ago before I had some major health issues and the pandemic kicked off, he got back in touch. He sent me a long email that was actually okay(ish?). He had briefly dated a woman, they had slept together, and then he realized he still actually hated women and her too, because she wasn't living up to his fantasy. And that no one could. He realized he had a lot of conflicting ideas, that women shouldn't depend on men for money, but they also shouldn't be too career focused, etc. Just, a lot of bad stuff all rolled up into one. He had included a bunch of stuff I absolutely hated, like the fact that he still feels that women our age are "past their prime" and have "cellulite."

I basically didn't have a ton of energy to reply other than to tell him I hoped he kept working at it and wasn't dating anyone else until he got over actively hating women.

/u/Holycowmotherofgod

I've seen babies with cellulite.

Edit (less glib): I know exactly what you're talking about here. I've been chubby my entire life, and I feel like I've developed a sixth sense for the kind of guy you're talking about here: the kind that de-sexes women whom he considers below his standard. They're everywhere.

/u/aklbos

Can confirm. Just had a baby two weeks ago. She's got like 6 chins. And I love her more than anything in the world.

/u/Nomicakes

Does she have those Michelin-man arms? I see babies like that and think to myself “how is this even a thing?!”. But they always grow out of it eventually.

/u/Nurodma

Chubby babies are healthy babies, I’ve noticed a pattern with my own kids. They start chubbing out and packing on weight a week or two before a big growth spurt. And then they wake up taller and skinnier.

“My Baby has Creases.”

My baby has creases -
or folds in his skin.
I can't really tell you just where they begin.
I can't help but poke them.
I can't quite resist.
They start at his elbow and end at his wrist.

My baby has creases -
a furrow or three.
A deep little valley where smoothness should be.
A wrinkle. A crinkle. A rumple. A crimp.
On sweet chubby forearms the shape of a blimp.

My baby has creases -
the tiniest bands.
A series of markings that lead to his hands.
My baby has creases -
enormous and small.

I love them.

I love them.

I just... love them all.

#3125 – People who had considered themselves “incels” (involuntary celibates) but have since had sex, how do you feel looking back at your previous self?

/u/Digibollocks

I was involuntarily celibate in that I wanted to have sexual relationships, but never met anyone interested. I didn't put any effort in, so it was kinda my fault. My lifestyle just didn't lend itself to meeting people, so it was hard.

When I finally did get out there and start having relationships it was like a weight lifted off my shoulders. I realised that I had previously felt like an incomplete person because of my inability to connect with anyone, and that was holding me back from other things in life. Like I thought nothing else was worth pursuing because I hadn't properly entered adulthood yet. I kinda wish I'd just got on with it and pursued my other interests a bit more. I don't know why I had to wait. Maybe it was depression relating to me being lonely. Edit: thinking about it a bit more, I put off dating for a long time because I thought I had to have my life in order first, which was why I waited until I hit some other life milestones. Once I hit those, I realised I had no excuse and finally started online dating. First one ghosted me, which hit me pretty hard after doing something positive for myself. Second one we really hit it off, and that's when I turned into a different person. It's worth the effort.

I didn't put any effort in, so it was kinda my fault. My lifestyle just didn't lend itself to meeting people, so it was hard.

I want a friend, a place,
a wife -
I want to share a space,
a life -
I want to share a want,
a will -
I want my share.
I want my fill.

I want a love, a hope,
a care -
A heart to help me cope,
a pair -
I want a one to hold,
to miss -
I want all that.
I want all this.

I want it all.
I want it more.
I want to take those days before
And make a life to lead with pride.

... I just don't want to go outside.

I never really considered myself an Incel at the time (mostly because I'd never heard the phrase) but I was very incelly in highschool, I was the type of person who would hold a door open and then wonder why girls weren't falling into my lap. Turns out highschool me wasn't that attractive and “nice” isn't a personality. I fell very much into the Chad's n stacey's frame of mind for a while.

A lot of things changed really, but mostly I just grew up. It's a super childish view of things and just doesn't take into account that the people around you are... well people.

If someone held a door open for you, you wouldn't throw yourself at them. It's about the maturity in relationships. But seriously Fuck highschool me, proper cunt Places like Aaron's just make me mad. It seems like you're getting a good deal, but you aren't. You're paying like twice as much for an item.

/u/LordSoren

What, you don't want to pay $2000 over 5 years for that PS4? It's only 8.50 weekly!

/u/25sittinon25cents

Anyone that thinks this model is a good idea should not be handling any finances. At that rate, you'll have spent more in a year than it would cost to buy a ps4

Edit: the amount of people replying with cries of "poor people have no other option" or "abuse of lack of financial skills" is really really concerning. This is a fucking ps4 we're talking about. It's not a necessity, if you really want one, save! Or get a calculator and do some basic elementary school math to learn that $8.50 per month x 24 months is more than what a ps4 is currently retailing for.

Edit 2: my comment was referring to luxuries, not necessities. For essentials, I feel for people that can't afford them. In the past I've financed furniture and other necessities. I would hope that everyone has access to fair financing for necessities, but I'm in agreement with everyone who says fuck companies that run an oligopoly and rip off people for essential products. Apologies to anyone that misinterpreted my comment which was focusing on ps4s and other luxury items which, people only have themselves to blame for making poor purchasing decisions

/u/JCat18

Single items of things that should be bought in bulk. Like single rolls of toilet paper.

Barely scraping by paycheck to paycheck means buying bulk is sometimes impossible.

/u/Epinier

Samuel Vimes got it right :

Take boots, for example. He earned thirty-eight dollars a month plus allowances. A really good pair of leather boots cost fifty dollars. But an affordable pair of boots, which were sort of OK for a season or two and then leaked like hell when the cardboard gave out, cost about ten dollars. Those were the kind of boots Vimes always bought, and wore until the soles were so thin that he could tell where he was in Ankh-Morpork on a foggy night by the feel of the cobbles.

But the thing was that good boots lasted for years and years. A man who could afford fifty dollars had a pair of boots that'd still be keeping his feet dry in ten years' time, while the poor man who could only afford cheap boots would have spent a hundred dollars on boots in the same time and would still have wet feet.

/u/Grandnaguss

Terry Pratchett - hell to the yes.

“It’s Expensive Being Poor.”

“Besieged by a bill, or deficient in rent?
Devoid of a dollar, bereft of a cent?
Depleted, defeated, or beggared and broke?
Well never you panic, you poorest of folk!

“That mountain of debt that you’re facing with dread?
You pay with tomorrow’s resources instead!
Your future is waiting to fill your account -
At charges quadruple the normal amount!

“And if you’re perturbed as you ponder the loan -
That next month arrives with the bills of its own -
That maybe you’ll weep for your choices before -
Then never you worry!

... you just borrow more.”

Thinking what his friend could mean -
Thinking all the thoughts between.

Jim was grinning, homeward sent -
Thinking what his buddy meant -
Thinking what he'd asked with pride -
Thinking what his friend implied.

Jim was laughing, reached his door -
Swung it open, crossed the floor -
Beamed to hear his buddy's fun.

Went upstairs and got his gun.

Imagine if pee wasn't red.

When Little Timmy went to pee,
He turned to someone there -
And said: "... how nice it is to wee,
And drop your underwear!

"I love to feel it hanging low!
I live to feel the breeze!
I like to feel the heady flow
Of air around the knees!

"And when my burning parts are cooled
In bathrooms 'cross the world -
I love to see the pee that's pooled
Around the sinkhole swirled!

"I'm sure you feel the same," he said,
And loosed his stream with pride.

But Little Timmy's pee was red.

And Timmy fucking died.

A neighbor's kid would mercilessly throw their 2 cats into the pool.
The cats would fight and scratch, but that didn't stop the boy from flinging the cats repeatedly into the pool and forcing them to "swim or drown."

(His father finally broke him of this behavior by throwing the kid in the pool, clothes and all, every time he caught his son torturing the cats.)

/u/friendofredjenny

Reminds me of a patient I saw at work once. She came in to be seen as a walk-in, dad was looking to have her admitted. I was getting her registered and checked in and noticed her hands and what I could see of her wrists (she was wearing long sleeves) were all cut up. I thought little of it, assuming it was self-harm. Being a psych hospital, we see that all the time.

I used to self-harm myself, though, and the wounds on her hands and fingers did make me wonder just a bit because that's a little unusual. It's a highly, highly visible location and quite mobile, too. I shrugged it off, she went back for assessment.

Came to find out from the social worker that met with her, the patient had strangled the family's pet cat to death. The wounds on her hands and arms were from the cat's claws. She had pinned it on its back and strangled it as it tore her arms to shreds.

Fucking hell.

/u/Ryuko-Chan_299

I’m glad the cat fucked them up

When Little Timmy took a glass,
The magnifying kind -
'Twas not the thing that came to pass
He'd hoped inside his mind.

He'd dreamed of tiny streams of light -
A glowing glare, a blur -
A flaring flash of burning bright
Upon his kitty's fur!

He'd dreamed of smoking feline skin -
He'd dreamed of searing paws -
And with a tiny evil grin,
He'd dreamed of flaming claws!

And so he'd dreamed of blazing beams
To burn his pet with pride -

But Timmy's cat had other dreams.

And Timmy fucking died.

Bonds corrupted, pledges broken,
Half-imagined dreams of danger,
Teeny tiny slips of stranger,
Dry bananas, damp flamingoes,
Dirty dogs and crusty dingoes,
Strange emotions, nasty notions,
Pink and purple putrid potions,
Bits of paper, paper flowers,

Oh god. You do not know what hell you have wrought on this world. You have destroyed the very fabric of civilization. Sure, you have the vanilla shit. The stepfamily kink. You'll see some people tied up, getting flogged. Screams of pain mixed with pleasure ring through the air.

Except no, because we have EVERYONE'S fantasies. Everyone. Every nook and cranny of human sexuality and kink is explored... and the results are catastrophic

Giant tentacle monsters roam the streets, looking for people to violate with their countless phallus-shaped arms. Anthromorphic animals are everywhere, hungry for lustful activities. Half-human, half-monster hybrids take victims by force and subject them to endless intercourse.

And this is just the beginning of the depravity.

Giants roam the land, swallowing humans and animals alike with every hole you can possibly imagine, and some you can't. The very Earth grows penises to fornicate forcefully with every living thing. Every horror you can imagine comes to life as Rule 34's entire database comes to life.

Humanity is extinct. Some fucked to death. Others the victim of execution fetishists. Even more still suffer fates so indescribably horrible that even thinking about it makes your brain explode.

On the plus side, we get cat girls.

That we are alone. Given how massive the universe is in space and time the idea that earth is the only place where any lifeform exists is unsettling. Everyone seems to be assuming that other life means humanoid or intelligent. To me it just means any life form. Carbon based or made of elements unknown to our galaxy. There has to be something else.

/u/shampoo_and_dick

Let's imagine the life of a cell. All it knows is that it is surrounded by other cells and a small area which it thinks is its big world.

I believe we are like cells to the current imaginable universe in contrast to an even bigger reality.

/u/ILoveWildlife

That's how i've looked at it. If you look at the world through this lens that the size of things doesn't really matter, but how it operates— you can sort of see how the universe is all patterns, all the way down.

/u/Natolx

Size absolutely matters. Physical laws work the same way for microorganisms as larger beings because our cellular units and molecules are actually the same size. We've seen things as "big as they can't get". After that they collapse into singularities so nothing can be bigger than that. Also, unlike micro organisms we have the capability to see far enough away to grasp things much larger than us.

Is it possible that there is another set of physical laws governing some universe of which ours is just an atomic particle? Sure, but you can literally just say anything at that point.

Though your member might be meager,
And your willy might be wee -
Though you badger and beleaguer
Every lucky girl you see -

It's the motion in the ocean,
It's the magic in the wand -
And it isn't magic potion,
It's the way you go beyond.

It's the rhyme and it's the wooing,
It's the feeling and the flow -
And it isn't what you're doing -

I think the scariest thing is that if an asteroid hit Earth right now and destroyed everything, nothing that we know of will recognize any record of anything that ever happened on Earth. There will be nothing to account for the loss of Earth.

So if there's nothing out there to do that, then it's like Earth never existed at all. Scary.

From star systems distant,
they came in the night.
They came in the dark
in a ship made of light.
They came in an instant,
they came in a blur -

To see how we'd flourished;
to see what we were.

They watched and they waited.
They stayed and they stared.
In silence,
they gathered.
In silence,
they glared.
They watched without motion.
They lingered and then -
They waited.
They waited.
They waited again.

'Twas silence that followed.
'Twas silent as night.
'Twas silent they watched us with eyes that were bright -
With legs that were blue,

When I was about 10 years old my parents and I were in our backyard clearing out a ton of weeds that had gotten out of hand. I had trouble focusing because our next door neighbor had this really adorable puppy and all I wanted to do was play with him.

We found out that they were actually going to take him to an animal shelter because their son was not taking care of him like he promised. I decided to ask my parents if maybe we could get him instead. I was an only child and never really have anyone to play with unless a friend would come over and the thought of having a puppy to play with whenever I wanted to was great.

My parents agreed and our neighbors offered to sell him to us for $20, which is really cheap for a dog when you think about it, but a lot of money for a kid. I had that saved up and immediately agreed and promised I care for him and love him forever. So, he became my puppy and like a brother. After a few days of debating I named him Snoopy.

Snoopy became my closest friend. He made me laugh, played with me, and would just hang out and watch TV with me. He was always there for me, especially through some tough times in my life where I was extremely self-destructive. He saved me from myself. He was there at my side through tough breakups where all I ever wanted to do was lay in bed. He was an amazing friend. He was there to see me graduate 8th grade, high school, and college. I hoped he would be there on the day I got married and maybe be around for when I had kids, but unfortunately as much as we wish for things, sometimes they don't happen.

This is the first picture of I have of us together and this is the last. He died 5 years ago after being by my side for almost 17 years. That little ball of fur in the first picture made such a huge impact on my life bringing me years of happiness, friendship, and love. Definitely the best purchase I have ever made and worth every penny and more.

I hoped he would be there on the day I got married and maybe be around for when I had kids, but unfortunately as much as we wish for things, sometimes they don't happen.

I made a wish.

I held it tight,
And each and every moonlit night,
I sat beneath the sight of Mars,
And sent it out to see the stars.

I made a wish.

I let it bloom,
A crimson rose in shaded gloom,
A braided kiss that spoke behind
And often woke to fill my mind.

I made a wish.

I cast it out
With childish hope devoid of doubt,
That shone like silver shoals of fish.

For after all,
I made a wish.

My graphic designer best friend won my town's "design the centennial logo" contest, despite having never set foot in the town.

I worked for the radio station, and just did an interview with one of the organizers, where he lamented that there weren't very many entries. So I called my friend and said, "Want in on this?" He said, "Sure!" As he lived on the other side of the country at the time, I spent the next day texting him photos of the town for inspiration.

Anyway, when he won and they found out he was a professional graphic designer who lived on the other side of the country, they made him and me sign NDAs because the town was afraid people would think they brought in a ringer.

EDIT: Wow, this kind of blew up, so let me answer some of the more common questions being brought up.

1) What's a ringer? A ringer is professional who's brought into a contest in order to guarantee favoured results.

2) Why did I have to sign the NDA? Well, they unveiled the logo at a great big ceremony where they presented the prize money (I think it was a couple hundred bucks), and since my friend lived on the other side of the country, he asked if I could accept on his behalf. I wound up not going, because we were broadcasting from another event that day, so the mayor accepted on his behalf.

3) Where is this? Canada. A small town in Alberta. That's all I'm comfortable sharing.

/u/arkiverge

How did they make you? They threaten to withhold the prize and you threaten to tell the public, which would be way worse PR-wise than what they alone wanted the NDA for.

/u/stabbitystyle

Presumably if they didn't sign the NDA, they wouldn't have picked the design.

“What, perhaps you ask with wonder,
Tore this very town asunder,

What, I hear your consternation,
Dread and fear and trepidation,

I read a thread ( I think it was a confessions thread on ASK Reddit) where a woman who ran a super successful home bakery business was literally just using pillsbury cake mix (and this is how I learned what pillsbury was as we dont have it in england).

She had the odd hack or 2 and was seriously good at decorating apparently, but she was essentially just using cake mix.

She even talked about how she felt like a fraud, got nauseous about going to the grocery store, and HATED the sight or taste of cake

I remember this! She would log in once every few years and give updates. Last I read, she stopped doing cakes because it became too much for her.

My mom does cakes as a side gig and while she makes her own frosting from scratch, she uses boxed cake mix that she, too, passes off as her own. Probably way more common than anyone lets on.

/u/lionorderhead

I do the same. I can decorate beautifully, but it's just more efficient to use the box cake mix for consistency. It's not like the box has any secret ingredients. It's the same shit you use when you home make, just premeasured and sifted.

/u/pflarr

Sure, for the dry ingredients. But the wet ingredients are totally different. Most cakes start with creamed butter and sugar, plus eggs, usually with some added flavoring (vanilla) and dairy (milk or buttermilk). Some get more complex, and require folding in the egg whites whipped.

Mixes generally just have you add oil and eggs. The dairy is milk powder, and any flavoring is also powdered. The most similar homemade recipes are oil based cakes like carrot cake, but even there the real thing and mixes are vastly different in flavor and texture.

/u/xocolatl_xylophone

When I watch those cake wars shows, they talk about the actual cake as an afterthought. It's always, always about the fucking fondant.

If I'm paying hundreds of dollars for a cake, the cake itself better be incredible... and not out of a box.

They looked at the filo,
the fondants, the cream -
The frosting, the donuts with glazes agleam -
The crusts and the candies, confections complete -
The cookies, contented,
all scented and sweet -

They looked at the brownies, the small melting bites -
The deep pretty dishes, with warm-baked delights -
They looked at the puddings, the pastries, the pie -
She watched them.

She whispered:

”... the cake is a lie.”

'Tis a tribulation sour -
'Tis the burden of the meek -
To be standing in the shower
Saying words you didn't speak -
To be lying on your pillow,
With a whisper in your mind -
As the thoughts inside you billow
With the line you couldn't find.

'Tis a horror hard-admitted
That you didn't know the way -
That you stood there weakly-witted
And without a word to say -
That you sat there sadly trying,
Though you didn't want to wait -

And you find yourself replying
When it's just too fucking late.

Descending from the sky -
He didn't doubt,
or fret,
or fear,
Or stop to wonder why.

He simply watched them plot the night,
And through the darkness, slip -
The moon and stars reflected white
And bright upon the ship.

He watched the craft, and as it came,
He pondered on his own -
That life would never be the same -
That Earth was not alone.

He thought, "I'll have to rise up tall."
He thought, "I'll take a stand."
He thought, "I'll have to get them all

Or be cremated and ask for your cremains to be put in a hole, and a tree planted on top. That's what i did with my dad's remains (a peach tree) and my mom's (a shad blou tree, her favorite). For my grandma I used a wild rose bush. It's fun to think of the "right" tree for each person, like for someone who was a little mean in life I would use a crab apple tree. I made a resolution to start bringing my lunch to work instead of eating out everyday. I have to say it's going pretty well.

If money is fleeting, and speedily spent -
Depleting completely by dollar and cent -
Diminishing, draining, and quick to depart -
Consider a few little changes to start:

It's simple advice, but it's prudent, no doubt -
Prepare your own food and avoid eating out!
That sandwich and cookie and coffee with foam -
It's endlessly cheaper to make it at home!

Reduce, if you're smoking, or bid them goodbye!
Go make yourself handy and learn DIY!
Whenever you're shopping, whatever you do -
Just ask: "do I need this?" and answer it true!

Consider a budget, or system to save -
It's easy to yield to the stuff that you crave!
Account for your cash, and the life that you lead -
Make lists when you're shopping and get what you need!

Remember: it's not about crafting a ploy
To drop or deny all the things you enjoy -
To linger, surviving on ramen and beans -
It's just about living inside of your means.

And if you still struggle and grapple and doubt -
You try and you work but you can't work it out -
You endlessly battle to balance your worth -

Then wait for a virus to fuck up the Earth.

I went into great detail about what I exactly worked on and which company it was(smaller indie company). My post got taken down for some bullshit reason after a few hours and coincidentally I was contacted by the company through Skype on the same day(after not hearing from them for quite a while) and got my full pay. I gave them information about my colleague who also didn't get his full pay and he got paid fully too.(which was good money for him since he lives in poland)

EDIT: Since this unexpectedly blew up I wanted to clarify that I am not saying that the company got the post pulled from reddit, there is zero evidence for them being involved in that. I once posted a story about me being exceptionally bad at basketball when I was a child, 15 years earlier, and someone commented with a link, saying, WAS THIS YOU??

The link went to the same story told from the perspective of someone else on my team. He posted it an hour before I did. This was also the second time I ever smoked weed, so my mind was just shattered.

EDIT: So the story was that while I was in the bathroom, one of the coaches said to the rest of my team, "If that kid makes a basket, we're all going out for ice cream." I didn't know that part, obviously. So a guy passed me the ball and I so surprised, I shot it immediately, and it was a swish. But... it was the wrong basket. All the kids on my team turned to the coach and were like, Does that count?!

He thought about it and then said No.

My twin and I have lived separately and together several times. My dog treated my sister and me like two separate members of the same family, but both our cats (one is mine, one is hers) have made it clear from the beginning the other twin is a second class citizen. We have exactly the same voice so when we visit each other there's about 1 minute of "why are there two of you" and then it's business as usual.

/u/shampoo_and_dick

My dog used to do a weird thing. If he is on my uncle's lap and my dad walks in, he'll swich to my dad's lap and vice versa.

So the idea of second class citizen from dogs perspective keeps changing time to time. Lol

Hahaa, yeah. So there is this old SNES game called "Tetris Attack" that's a "Panel del Pon" port with a Super Mario World 2 theme. I played the shit out of that game when I was growing up and I was pretty good at it. I'm actually still half-decent and I only play every few months when I visit my family. Anyhow, I was kinda-sorta seeing this guy and I have NO idea how the topic came up, but he challenged me to beat him at "Tetris Attack". I had sincere doubts that he had ever played before despite his posturing, and...it turned out I was right. I trounced him and he actually said, "How are you so good at this stupid game?" Practice, my dude. Years of practice.

Edit: Holy shit you guys, I can't tell you how heartwarming it is to see so much love for my favorite puzzle game of all time. I have talked to employees at retro game stores who didn't know Tetris Attack, and here is the internet proving to me that my passion is justified. I love every single one of you. Keep on chainin'.

Back in college, I was eating at Chipotle with my friend Anthony, who is typically a pretty suave guy. As we were talking, he was alternating between taking sips of his beer and dumping Tabasco on his burrito before taking a bite. He gets lost in our conversation and I see him grab the Tabasco and start bringing it to his lips before catching himself and grabbing his beer instead. Then I see him do it again, getting even closer to his mouth this time before realizing his mistake. He laughs it off. Another minute goes by and, exceeding all expectations, he grabs his beer and pours it into his burrito.

People will corrupt about anything that has to do with power (and/or money).

You start with the best of intentions, you do -
A hope in your heart and a dream to come true -
A vow on your lips that you're longing to say -
A wish for a better tomorrow, today.

You start with a view of what's right and enough -
But some things are easy, and others are tough -
And sometimes you're led through a new open door -
And sometimes "enough" is a little bit more.

The way you imagined,
the why and the how -
It's far from the path that you're reaching for now -
And gone is the dream that you hoped to come true.

You grasp for a better tomorrow.

For you.

I'm tempted to believe the one about Michael Jordan's first retirement being a "secret suspension" for betting on games.

/u/jaketocake

If I was Michael Jordan I would bet on my games too.

/u/REDBEARD_PWNS

I kinda think he was approached by organized crime and they attempted to extort him into losing games or maybe even the finals one year.

The timing of his fathers death is too creepy.

/u/Isaiah_6_8

I hear his pops was murdered because of Mike's gambling debts

/u/OldDekeSport

Thats the darker side of the conspiracy theory, but is part of it. MJ is a known competitive junkie and there are stories of him betting thousands of dollars on each hole if you golf with him.

I wouldn't be surprised if he gambled on games, and got caught. The NBA knew they'd be dumb to Pete Rose him, so he retires for a year then comes back

/u/Aunt_Vagina1

But MJ's current networth is $2.1 billion so to put his gambling on golf in perspective, he could bet $10k on each hole and that would be the equivalent of me betting a $1 a hole.

/u/town_bicycle

Which would make it hard for me to believe his dad was killed over his gambling. If he lost, he could just pay the debt, right?

Unless he was like, "I bet you my dad's life that I'm gonna hit a hole in one right here!"

I've always thought that competition reality shows purposefully send someone home each season that deserves to stay, so that people get mad and talk about it online and get other people interested in watching the show

/u/jaketocake

I think they have who they already want to win at the beginning.

/u/sjallliday

Last season of MasterChef was so obvious from the beginning who they wanted to win. I can't even remember her name because she wasn't impressive at ALL and should have gone home early in the competition.

The kid who should have won, Nick, was so much more talented, creative, and risky, but they didn't want him to win because he comes from a wealthy family and the woman who did win came from a poor background and has a dead mom

Edit: cake to came

Edit 2: my phone is being annoying and won't take me directly to responses to this comment, so hopefully the person who mentioned the raw fish sees this - I'm not sure it was raw! That was a white fish. White fish isn't red like that when it's raw. I seriously believe it was a bloodline. Also, if he treated all of the pieces of fish exactly the same (same size, same amount of time in fridge, same time being cooked), it makes no sense that one of the three he served was raw. Some people have suggested that it was a piece planted by producers. I'm not sure they would go THAT far to actively sabotage somebody who was on their way to winner. I do believe it was a bloodline, which Aaron should have known.

Have you lost a bigger brother?
Have you lived a painful life?

“Did a battle leave you bloody,
Leave you broken on your knees?
Are you dancing for a buddy
With incurable disease?

“Are you fit to go the distance

/u/Pyrocephalus-rubinus

As a zookeeper coordinator I've been working at the now closed zoo almost every day for the past month. Animals that are free roaming (peacocks, iguanas) are more active, and follow keepers around like they usually do with visitors. Most of the others don't show much change in behavior. Although birds like swans and flamingoes are using the edges of their habitats more.

/u/shampoo_and_dick

True. I haven't found much change in pets or those animals that are being well taken care of.

I have noticed that this has mostly affected stray animals whose only source of food was by eating all they found on the streets/parks. Since, nobody is around, they don't get food :(

I do my best by feeding like 10-12 stray dogs who come to eat at our farm. It makes my day watching them eat.

We were supposed to meet at 9pm, he fell asleep and called me at 9:30 when I was already at the carnival. I told him not to bother coming as I didn't want to see him.

He asked for another chance and I agreed.

Unfortunately my dad got really ill and had to spend the next six weeks in the hospital with me visiting him daily. I had no time for dates and he got extremely mad.

He made a fake Instagram account which he used to follow me and everybody that I followed. He then saw me in a friend's Instagram story and showed up to the restaurant we were at. He called me a whore and a liar and we had to threaten to call the police because he would not leave.

Edit: some of you are asking how it ended and I'll just add this to my comment.

He had my number and kept calling me using different phones. I knew it was him because he'd just be silent and I could hear him breathing. He did this for over 10 months, I was even living in a different country towards the end.

One day I was expecting a call from a friend and had a missed call from a landline so I called back.

It was his mom, I explained to her what was happening and after a long silence she said “Please don’t call the police, I will talk to him”.

Never heard from him again.

Edit 2: some people are asking how the convo with his mum went so I’ll just type it here too.

I was living in Thailand at the time and I had a friend (“Luis”) text me the night before telling me that he missed me and he wanted to catch up so I told him he could call after I finished work (I was a teacher there). When I came back from school I saw I had a missed call from a landline and I assumed it was Luis so I called back. A woman picked up.

Her: Hello?

Me: Hi, Teeny Gecko here, I have a missed call?

Her: it must have been “Carlos”, he’s not home at the moment but I’ll have him call you later.

It clicked for me, I only know two guys named Carlos.

Me: Carlos Surname?

Her: yes!

Me: Im sorry but could I talk to you for a second?

Then I told her everything I remembered, I was so scared she would not believe me and call me a liar etc.. I was shaking and I’ve never felt so shit, it was nearly 2 years ago and I forget the exact details but she kept whispering “dios mío” as I was telling her. She asked me to not call the police and I told her I would if I ever heard from him again. I never did.

Edit 3: some people are asking me how I found out about the fake Instagram account so here it goes:

The reason I was at a restaurant was because my sister had flown in from Dublin to visit my dad for a weekend and she made plans to meet her friends for tapas. I drove her to the restaurant and her friends saw me drop her off and asked me to stay, I did.

After a while, I saw him and he yelled, the waiter threatened to call the police, and after the madness I sat back down and we all looked at each other like WTF.

I wondered how TF he knew I was there and the only way he could have known was because one of my sister’s friend put up a story where we were all saying “saluuuuud!” with our drinks and she saw that one 40+ people saw the story. We ended up finding his profile and realized that he had followed EVERYONE I followed so that’s how. We all reported the account and it got taken down by Instagram.

My worst tinder experience was pretty traumatizing for me at the time. I was a sophomore in college and she was a junior or senior at the same school. The first time we ever hung out, I went over to her apartment and we just watched some Netflix and hung out. Nothing crazy. I was thinking this chick is super cool, we may have something here. So I leave telling her I'd like to see her again if she's down. She told me she would love to and just hit her up whenever and we'll make some plans.

We start texting/snap chatting throughout the week and organize some plans for the following weekend. Out of nowhere, she starts sending me unsolicited nudes. Never once asked for them and when we were hanging out the weekend prior, there was no sexual activity at any level. We quite literally Netflix and chilled. It caught me off guard, but I was more than cool with it. I'm a young college guy and this hot older chick wants to send me nudes after only hanging out one time? Say less.

Fast forward to the weekend, she comes to my apartment and we're hanging out with my roommates watching something on TV. She asks me if she can stay the night, and after sending nudes to me all week, I kind of figured what was up, so in my head I'm like "...uhh fuck yes". But I tell her of course and to be polite I offer to sleep on the couch because we've only known each other for all of about 2 weeks and have only seen each other in person one time prior. She tells me she'd rather me sleep in my bed with her, so I know it's on.

We get to Netflix and chilling in my room and I make a move. We start to hook up and eventually wind up having sex. I wore a condom and finished inside of it and tossed it off to my side of the bed. As we're laying there after a few minutes, she gets up abruptly, comes around to my side of the bed and grabs the condom off the floor and runs into the bathroom. I'm a little confused, maybe a little concerned but kind of brush it off. As I'm laying there in my bed I hear a loud crash in my bathroom she yells "fuck" I ask if she's okay and get no response. I'm a little concerned thinking this girl just fell in my bathroom and cracked her head open or something. I go to open the door and she is standing in my shower with one leg propped up trying to shove the condom up her vagina after she flipped it inside out. I freak out, no clue what to do. She's clearly freaked out and probably embarrassed? I have no clue. I shut the door and she immediately comes back out, says she's gonna leave and I say sounds good. I never hear from her again.

with good luck.

As long as you're happy,

There is a drainage ditch in my area that the local homeless people tend to bed down in. A few years ago, when I found myself destitute, I spent one night down there. That night

I witnessed a molotov get thrown into another dude's spot which led to a huge fire that ran rampant through the area. Yeah, I bought a tent the next day and started camping in the local mountains.

[/u/Poem\_for\_your\_sprog \[Link\]](#)

A few years ago, when I found myself destitute, I spent one night down there. That night I witnessed...

When all my chances come and go,
And when I'm lost and feeling low -
When days are hard,
and nights are long,
And when I'm seeming none-too-strong -

When nothing's fine, and nothing's fair,
And when I find it hard to bear -
When something special splits apart,
And when I lose my home, my heart -

I know, I must not fear or doubt.
I tell myself it will work out.
I have to thrive.
I must be true.
I will survive.
I will make do.

But having hope is half the curse,
And when you're down,
it just gets worse.

It seems there's always more to fall.

I wonder: what's the point at all?

Tell them what you liked about what they did.
You can tell them what you didn't like later (or ideally, during if it's really not working for you; either way, the after-party is a good time to keep it positive). Everyone fucks different, and it's very encouraging to know that you hit on something that worked for your partner. It also encourages them to do the same for you, which will mean that a) you know you've got a trick up your sleeve for next time, and b)

if you ever want to get them off quickly because your show's about to start, you've got that magic button for when you want to wrap things up.

Open communication about your wants and desires is key, especially with someone you plan on fucking again. A little post-coital play-by-play can do wonders for your sex life.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link] 📄 × 2 🗨️ × 2

some people fuck slow -
And some fuck behind you,

And some fuck in silence,
and others just smile.

Some people fuck quickly,
some people fuck long -
And some fuck you softly, and some fuck you strong -
And some fuck you gently, and some fuck you rough -
And some fuck in nightwear,

Some people fuck often,
some people fuck not -

But why, and who am I?
What happened to me?
Is this what I've come to?
Is this what I'll be?

Is this how it ends,
in the wake of a wang?
And not with a whimper,
but really a bang?
A hollow enactment of lecherous love?
A labored performance of moans from above?

“What happened?” I whispered:
”I don’t understand.”
I sat there ashamed with my head in my hand.
I wiped at a tear with a tissue, and then -

Of all his favored fish -
He said: "Oh how I love to feel
My beak upon a dish!

"I love to taste a sample sweet -
I love to feed and dine -
I love to savor feasts replete
With flavors all divine!

"To gulp," said he, "to sip, to swig,
To munch, to crunch!" he cried.

But Squiddy's meal was rather big.
And Squiddy fucking died.

I can't look left. Seriously. I'm not an ambi-looker, it's like the Zoolander of birth defects! It's called Duane's Syndrome and my left eye can't turn left so if I try to look to my left I see double.

Growing up my parents raised me to believe it was a party trick and not a disability so I would always show it off to friends, which in retrospect I think was pretty sweet.

Edit: My mom discovered that something was off when I was a baby and she was doing the "airplane" motion with the spoon of baby food to the left. My left eye was not cooperating lol

Edit 2: Fun fact - now that i'm in my 30s I can see in photos that there is a bag under my right eye but not under my left eye, presumably because I use my right eye far more often

Edit 3: I am so excited to see there are so many fellow redditors with Duane's and i'm not alone! I've never met anyone else who had it so it's really nice to hear from people who know what it's like

Edit 4: A lot of you have asked about driving-It didn't impact me mainly because my mom taught me how to use my mirrors first by turning my head before even letting me turn the car on for the first time! She walked around the car and we tried to identify my limitations. I also have a blind spot detector on my car now which is super helpful (i try not to totally depend on it though)

Not sure if it counts, but I was a mod for a subreddit related to true crime.. We got a report about a guy asking really off questions. He was basically asking hypotheticals about what kinds of clues detectives would look for if his wife was murdered. He was saying that she ran on a trail that was dangerous, and if something happened to her, he would want to help with the investigation. Someone told him it seemed like he was planning to murder his wife and was soliciting advice to help cover his tracks. As soon as they said that he deleted all of his posts and account. We sent the reports up the chain, and I believe the super admins may have contacted the police. I never heard any follow-ups, so I'm not sure if it was a bad joke or what. It was really unsettling though.

I've worked for many a YouTube channel. The blacklists last for miles. Racial slurs everywhere, creepy shit about literally any female on screen. Never underestimate how moderated a large channel's comments are. Sometimes it's someone's whole day

One thing that stuck in my brain was one account that was just like pure vitriol. "You guys are a disgrace", "you don't deserve to live", "kill yourselves" and the like. Nothing particularly specific, but just hateful. So before banning this account from commenting I decide to click on it. It's a girl, had to be like 13-14, and severely mentally disabled. I couldn't stop thinking about what this girl had been through to make her so angry and that she could only express it online. I'll never forget that shit man, how many other shitty YouTube commenters are just like- bullied or even abused kids with nowhere else to lash out

The blacklists last for miles. Racial slurs everywhere, creepy shit about literally any female on screen.

The screen was bright against the night,
And lit the bedroom, late.
He watched it glow with orange light -

my scholar’s scope -
My rarely spoken mind!

“Perhaps they liked my whim, my wit,
My wilful, wily cheer -
Perhaps, if chance and fate permit,
My time to shine is here!”

He clicked the box and slowly read
The words it held in store:

“u rly fukin suk,” it said.

And so he posts no more.

Stay safe! And thank you!

/u/carterothomas

I'm saying this as someone who has gone the CNA/EMT to ER tech to PA student route, the CNAs are some of the most under appreciated and valuable people in the field. If we really care about our most vulnerable populations, we will support the CNAs and other similar healthcare workers when the cloud settles (if not before). If we let folks like her continue to get paid peanuts for working crazy hours, then it was all lip service. Excuse me while I hop off my soapbox and grab another beer.

Edit: Thank you. Got it. Certified Nursing Assistant.

/u/lolastruggles

Certified nursing assistant, they make close to minimum wage to help nurses with their workload

Edit: while it may not literally be the minimum wage I think the consensus is that they typically don't make a livable wage. There's also some big differences in wage depending on the state. Apologies on the poor wording!

/u/McCool303

Nobody should have to go to school to be paid minimum wage. Speaking as the husband of a nurse. What is even more ridiculous is the amount of hospitals that try to save money by not having CNA's to help nurses when they already pay CNA's like shit.

/u/sgvjosetel

CNAs are pretty entry level job in the medical field. The shit they have to put up with is way worse than getting certified.

“The Nurse”

Her arms are stiff.
Her legs are sore.
She wakes and washes, eats.
She walks downstairs
then out the door,
And on to empty streets.

She heard the news at dawn, aghast.
The reader cried to say:
A hundred more on Friday last.

Two hundred more today.

The hall goes on ahead for miles.
She opens doors with doubt.
And stops to see there's some with smiles -
And others there without.

She turns her hands to one and then -
She turns to all the rest.
And some she helps to rise again,
And some she tries her best.

But this man's lungs gave all they've got -
A life too young to lose.
Another face to her that's not
A number in the news.

Her arms are stiff.
Her legs are sore.
She changes charts and sheets.
She cleans her hands,
then out the door,
And back on empty streets.

And so it goes -
but that's her task.
She works without a fuss.

“Whatever for?” I hear you ask.

Whatever for?

For us.

I have a few minor karma rules:

- If you treat people who are below you on the social/corporate ladder poorly, you will hit a red light every time on your way home with an inexplicably full bladder.
- If you microwave fish in the office cafeteria, you will have a paper cut by the end of the day.
- If you litter, a bird will poop on your windshield.

But my main protocol is simple and prevalent: if you are a dick, people won't like you in the long term.

This is the way.

| If you litter, a bird will poop on your windshield.

Some heroes wear leather.

Some heroes wear hats.

Some heroes wear capes and pretend that they're bats.

Some heroes wear suits from their heads to their toes -

But Power the Pigeon is not one of those.

Some heroes use weapons.

Was getting screamed at in a meeting by some marketing jerk that was literally demanding my technical group perform magic on a completely unrealistic time schedule with almost no resources. Literally screaming at me in front of about 8 of my peers, calling me incompetent, "just do your job" ....all of that. I stood up, said I refuse to be talked to like that, and left the meeting. Normally if you just get up and leave these types of meetings, you're fired. Boss scheduled a meeting with me later in the afternoon after hearing about it. Figured I'd be walked out....was told they fired the marketing guy.

That was my "eff it, I quit" moment. But the company kept me on and fired the other guy. Pretty happy, it's been a solid place to work ever since.

/u/toddsleivonski

That's a nice one, more bosses should be along those lines and fire the cunts causing the workplace to be trash.

Many many years ago, I worked at a place called Daily Fast food. I only worked there for 3 days. I was going through the food items in the deep fridge and the manager walked by and started yelling at me for checking that! He said don't look what's there and do your cooking. I was curious and later when he had gone out, I checked it and found that it was smelling meat from several days ago. I quit right there. Noped the frick right out the door.

When I began to argue why he was doing this shit, he called me an idiot and a stupid guy and everyone laughed at me. I clearly knew everyone was involved in selling rotten meat. I fired myself before that ass hat boss would do.

Those employees were even more evil.

Edit: Hell yeah, I reported it and they were heavily fined. However, they got to keep the business going but they were under regular checks by the food safety team.

/u/insertstalem3me

I notice all the toilet paper is gone and SOMEONE has to be behind that

It was probably those damn Charmin bears

/u/dm_me_alt_girls

Charmin. I'm fucking tired of those stupid, ass-obsessed bears

. I don't let toilet paper control my fucking life. Their entire world revolves around toilet paper. I get that they are in a commercial, but ass-inspection? Really? That is a little too far. They pause football games to inspect asses. One commercial has them ready to change vacation plans over toilet paper

. And speaking of traveling bears, one commercial features a TSA bear inspecting another's ass before boarding a plane. Even going so far as to commend the bear on packing Charmin ("You're cleaner than I thought," says the agent). Ass-inspection in the Charmin bear universe is so commonplace that it is enforced as a security measure.

Here

a bear is chasing a cub around with a dustpan to collect used toilet paper stuck to the cub's ass. The narrator says, "You'll never pass inspection with pieces left behind." Is Charmin trying to push an ass-inspection agenda? I hope to never have to endure a toilet paper inspection, let alone be subjected to it every time I use the restroom. Here a cub is literally doing gymnastics to make sure he doesn't fail his ass-inspection but to no avail. These bears are relentless. They will scrutinize each other's asses at any given opportunity. Even in print, they resort to using a vacuum cleaner to clean other bears asses.

Look at this commercial

, a mother and cub looking at “the Moon”. In any sane family, that would be the satellite that orbits the Earth. Unfortunately, this is Charmin Bear world, where it not only means the cosmic body, but the body of their fellow bear

. They are literally using a telescope to inspect the ass of another bear sitting in a tree.

These bears are so incredibly self-centered too. All they care about is toilet paper. In this commercial the cub drains an entire lake so he wouldn't have to fish. Of course, he uses the toilet paper in the tackle box because these bears don't go anywhere without a fucking roll of toilet paper. It doesn't even make sense. Is Charmin advocating destroying an entire lake to catch all the fish? It seems a little misguided.

This commercial (video) features a bunch of cubs saying that Charmin is so good, you could wear your underwear "a second day". Mind you, all these cubs are naked

! The commercial ends with one cub saying to another, "You should try it Skids." Do these bears really make up nicknames based on the cleanliness of each other's asses? What kind of fucked up world is it where naked bears make fun of each other for ass appearance?

Especially the one where one bear says "what a great view" and the other sticks his bare bear ass in her face and says "thanks to Charmin". It's fucking weird. Fuck those bears. I will never buy Charmin as long as those bears are waving their asses at me.

#3007 – people who grew up rich but turned out poor what is your story?

2020-03-24 14:19:28

/u/decrypted_

Edit: wow I was not expecting to get over 60k upvotes thank you guys!

/u/mhol7597

I grew up rich. I wouldn't say I'm poor but I don't live near as well as my parents.
I grew up in a house which zillow has now valued at 5 million dollars in a very wealthy area. My mom never worked.

My dad had an office and employees and besides my mom, three ex-wives. My grandmother and great grandfather came from extreme wealth.

And really, it just turned out that my dad, though he was pretending for years to run a business, have an office and be a big important person, never actually made any money. All of it was drawn from a trust that had been set aside for him, and finally when it went dry, it was over.

When my parents passed I inherited about $13,000. Meh, that's life. I have two siblings that roam the earth thinking there's still something they can capitalize on from all this ... some privilege bank of connections they can make with- drawals from. But I've accepted that I'm just ordinary folk. Life doesn't owe me anything.

So "Fake it 'til you Make it" doesn't work?

My dad was more like he had it made, he just had to not fuck it up

My dad was more like he had it made, he just had to not fuck it up

In life, you won't be always right.
You'll lie awake at times at night
And think about the how, the way
You fucked it up -
and that's okay.

You'll get it wrong.
You'll make mistakes.
You'll turn a bend and hit the brakes
And see the proof, the truth, the sign
You fucked it up -
and that's just fine.

You'll be at fault.
You'll be to blame.
You'll trip, you'll slip and feel the shame
Of each mistake arrive anew
'Cause folks fuck up -
that's what we do.

Still all the same, you have to see -
That even though you tried to be,
But ended down and out of luck -

There's certain things you can't unfuck.

“Fuck okay things are escalating quickly... oh goD HIS DICK IS OUT. Should I just give him a handy? Fuck I don't know how to do that either. Spit in my hand? That feels weird. Just go for it just fucking full send. Oh god this tastes bad. Soooo bad. Use your tongue, that's what people do, right? How does the flavor keep getting worse? He seems to be enjoying himself tho.”

Having a convo with him and one of his friends later, found out that he would just “let the shower water run over his dick” and he wouldn't actually clean it. No wonder my mouth tasted like old cum for two days after the fact.

/u/TheGuyWithSnek

He didn't clean his dick...? Fuck that's disgusting.

/u/Leucosla

Crazier part is that I didn't know that wasn't what dick was supposed to taste like... I remember trying to go get lunch after an escapade once and I couldn't even eat because my hands smelled so bad no matter how many times I washed them

/u/CNXQDRFS

You poor soul.

It came through the air on a river of smell -
A gift from the feculent fissures of Hell -
A harvest of horror;
a boon from the bung -
A flavour of faeces ferociously flung.

It rose in its rankness,
it twisted and twirled -
And drenched in damnation,
it spiralled and swirled -
It splashed and it splattered, it showered and stank -
A mighty malodorous dampness of dank.

And there, in the wake of this stinking surprise -
Beset by his balls with his hair in my eyes -
Besieged by the banquet of salt and of shit -
I paused on his penis.

I thought: "... is this it?"

#3005 – Window washers of reddit: what is the most memorable thing you have seen while on the job?

2020-03-22 15:48:04

/u/Noah19or22

/u/spliffwizard

Ooo, one of my first jobs I worked as a window cleaner in a lil town in England, for a year maybe, saw some sights..
Once saw an old lady getting changed, nearly jumped off the ladder in fear but luckily didn't see anything, was in charge of collecting the money though and it was real awkward.

One time an old man sat in his armchair and watched me intently with a deadpan expression as I cleaned his living room windows, three of them, I was pretending I couldn't see him, but I could.

Boss' son also worked with us and literally all dogs hate him, no idea why.. watched maybe 15 dogs chase this dude over the year, one bit his arse cheek so hard he had to get stitches lol

Had to clean a 4 storey building on a hill and boss used to prop the ladder up with 2 bricks under one leg, super unsafe, while I shook my way up the ladder. All the window ledges were also covered in rusty nails to stop pigeons from landing so I'd be like 40 foot in the air on an unstable ladder, shaking, trying to clean a window behind 100 giant rusty nails, terrifying.

My favourite story I was cleaning away and looking at this guy's room and noticed a skateboard (I'm also a skater) and thought "oh damn I recognise that deck", it belonged to a guy I'd met like twice at the local park, the next day I was at the skate park and walked over to him (bare in mind we've exchanged like 8 words before this), I sat next to him and kept a complete stone expression and said "hey you look like the kind of guy who'd have black bed sheets" he was like "wtf I do have black sheets.." I was like "with white squares, I bet your rooms blue as well" and he noticeably freaked, like "how the fuck do you know all this!?" An then I had to drop it, "I'm your window cleaner mate, saw your deck in a room yesterday ahaha". Fast forward 11 years and he's currently my oldest and closest friend!

Thank you I'd forgotten that last story.

Edit: added commas

Edit 2: Oh shit my 1st award, thank you kind stranger!

/u/sarah-xxx

ha that guy's good at guessing..

/u/spliffwizard

Hahaha I do wish I took it further but I barely know him

/u/sarah-xxx

I feel you'd have had a restraining order instead of a new friend had you done that. Haha

/u/spliffwizard

Haha that was my thinking, could have been a great TIFU though...

“Will you be my friend?” he pondered,
Pictured paths they might have wandered,
Filled with pride and full of pleasure,
Hoping for a friend to treasure.

“Will you my pal?” he asked him,
Shook his hand and told him, tasked him,
Asked him if he’d stay and sweetly
End his lonely days completely.

“Will you be my bro forever,
Hold me dear and leave me never,
Ever glad and happy-hearted?”

” ... no,” he said, and swiftly parted.

When the rain tumbles down onto still, silver lakes -

I'll remember your smile in the ripples it makes.

When the stars fade to dawn -

When the summer-wind carries the rainclouds away -
When the tide travels in, and the sunlight has set -

I will miss you forever,

The States, and Britain too -
It travelled far by boat and plane
For each and all to view!

But Timmy stayed at home all night,

He found with joy and deep delight
Coronavirus passed.

And so he lived to fight again -
He shook his head and sighed.

But Yellowstone erupted then.

He smiled in the silence.

#3000 – Funeral home employees/owners of Reddit, what's the most ridiculous outfit you've seen someone buried in?

2020-03-16 20:41:06

/u/Gug21

/u/thenextlineis

My first husband was an AVID fisherman. His parents insisted he be buried in a suit. But his favorite outfit was a pair of khaki shorts and a yellow BassPro tshirt. I asked the funeral director to put that outfit underneath the suit, and no one was the wiser. I put a couple of his favorite lures and his most well-loved pipe in his pocket. I don't doubt for a moment that the crematorium disposed of those items, but at least I knew I did right by him.

Edit: Thank you for all the really great responses. I've never had a moment of regret about this decision. It is what he would have wanted. I appreciate the responses from people in the funeral industries, too. I didn't think they stripped his body, but I knew they wouldn't leave his wedding ring on, so I think I just assumed they emptied pockets, etc. Kind of a weird thing to assume, now that I think about it. Good to know he probably got to keep it all.

I don't doubt for a moment that the crematorium disposed of those items, but at least I knew I did right by him.

I brought you all your finest things -
The light to last the night.
Your pipe,
your lures on silver strings.

I hope I did you right.

Trazadone for sure. I was in the hospital to get my heart fixed up and was having a hard time falling asleep. To this day no one is sure exactly what happened, if I was given too much or just had a bad reaction or what. But I remember laying there and thinking something.. wasn't right.

I got up and just kinda wandered around trying to find a nurse. I was FREEZING but pretty sweaty too and couldn't really see or hear so well. And you know that feeling when you bang your funny bone? My whole body felt like that.

The weirdest part was I kept realizing "oh man I'm in trouble" and would start to panic but then a second later I'd sorta forget and feel so.. serene? I remember a nurse running towards me but she looked like she in slow motion, like we were underwater kinda. And I knew I had something really important to tell her but couldn't remember what it was. All I could think was how beautiful everything was, how the light was catching her hair and her sneakers squeaking across the floor sounded like a symphony. I remember smiling at her and jus kinda slumping against the wall and then everything went dark.

I woke up hooked up to a buncha monitors with a lotta worried faces standing around. My blood pressure had dropped down to nothing and if they hadn't found me when they did I probably woulda died. 6/10 experience, it was very beautiful but they made me chug so much yellow Gatorade and to this day that stuff makes me gag.

The colours were indigo, purple and blue -
A shade in the silence,
a sweet silver hue -
A quiver of crimson,
a sliver of light -
A shiver of shining,
a sign in the night.

I wandered the hallways,
and there in the haze -
I stared with surprise at the skies in the daze.
I saw through the shadows to see where they led -
I reached out a hand to the heavens ahead.

And then, as the tints and intensities stirred -
The paints and the pigments, the tinges they blurred -
I saw what was waiting for me at the end.

I slipped into darkness.

Would not recommend.

“The Day God Created Mosquitoes”

When God was enjoying a wonderful day -
He coloured the ocean, the sea and the spray.
He peppered the planet with forests of trees -
With sweet subtle scents on a warm summer's breeze.

He crafted the kitten, and when he was done -
Perfected the pup and the penguin for fun.
He playfully reached in the depths of his mind -
And found all the finest of Animal Kind.

“A toast,” he exclaimed, “to the things that I’ve made!

The creatures I've crafted, the plans that I've laid!"
And so with fulfilment, content to his core,
He knocked back a whiskey... and poured himself
more.

The following morning he woke in a daze.
He woke with a head full of headache and haze.
He woke with a groan and a moan of distress.
He woke and he rose, and his place was a mess.

The whiskey was empty.
The cupboards were bare.
He'd drank till the dawn of the morn in his chair.
And when all his liquors had passed by his lip -
He'd conjured a spirit for spirits to sip.

"Good Heavens," he whispered, "oh boy, what a night -
At least nothing happened," he said with delight.
He walked to his workshop.
He went for his key.
He stared with dismay, and he said "oh my me."

His organised boxes of animal parts -
The toes and the noses, the lungs and the hearts - He'd spilled them; he'd mixed them and filled them and split.

He'd opened the box that said Horrible Shit.

"Oh Jesus," said Jesus, from somewhere behind.
"You've got to stop drinking each time you've designed!"

But God heard the buzzing.
He whispered with doubt:

"I'm sure that it's nothing to worry about..."

#2988 – What are some signs that a relationship has run its course?

2020-03-11 17:25:52

/u/FagnusTwatfield

/u/RamsesThePigeon

There are quite a few signs that a relationship is reaching its end, but the most common are as follows:

Conversation has all but entirely stagnated.

Many people mistake mutual interest for compatibility, but that inevitably leads to relationships which end once the getting-to-know-you stage is over. If you find yourself struggling to converse with your partner – if you can't just talk about your day, rant to each other, or find new experiences to discuss – then it's likely that you'll end up going your separate ways before too much longer.

Spending time with one another feels like a chore.

Neither loving someone nor being in love with someone is enough to make a pairing last, especially if one of you feels like they're carrying more emotional weight than the other. If you dread the prospect of spending extended periods of time with your partner (or if you suspect that they have similar reservations about your interactions), it's generally a sign that the relationship is nearing its end.

You keep finding venomous spiders in your underwear drawer.

While it's true that many arachnids prefer to hide in dark, dry places, they lack the mental wherewithal to effectively inform others of their kind about choice vacation spots. As such, if you continually find spiders attempting to use your unmentionables as a gondola to your nether regions, there's a good chance that your significant other is responsible for their presence. This should be taken as a sign that not all is well between the two of you.

Your partner is deviating from their routine without informing or including you.

Everyone likes change from time to time, but humans are also creatures of habit. We typically only make large adjustments to our lives when something (or someone) significant has entered the picture ... and if you've been kept in the dark about such a development in your partner's life, there's a good chance that they're intentionally withholding something from you. It won't necessarily be that they're cheating, though: They might be altering their commute so that they can make frequent stops at Honest Earl's Discount Fish and Appliance Repair, which (as everyone knows) is the premiere place to shop for spiders.

In short, there are a number of things that can signal the end of a relationship ... but before you jump to any conclusions, it pays to be completely open, mature, and communicative. If nothing else, you'll both come away feeling significantly less hurt, and you'll both be significantly better off in the future.

TL;DR: Four common signs of an impending breakup.

You keep finding venomous spiders in your underwear drawer.

When Little Timmy paused to pick
His daily underwear -
He glanced across his options quick,
And chose himself a pair.

“How sweet it is,” he whispered, keen -
”How neat,” he thought to say -
”To choose a pair of panties clean,
With which to start the day!

“You see,” said he, “there isn’t much
As half as nice to know -
Than fabric on your balls and such,
The softest touch below!”

And so it was he chose his pair -
He made his pick with pride.

He didn’t see the spider there.

And Timmy fucking died.

/u/notgoodredditname

Had this cliff that was really dangerous, and to keep kids away the genius locals spread around the rumor that it was haunted. Naturally the cool kids wanted to go there like all the time.

Once the gang of those supposedly cool kids (4 in total) went there and no one really knows what happened, one kid jumped to his death, the stories of the rest didn't pan out correctly. Each one had a different version. They were high. No one was jailed. But all three were depressed and eventually spiraled out of control. One OD'd two years later, one was in a car accident, drunk. And one committed suicide.

/u/hsuait

That cliff is definitely haunted.

/u/absolute paul

When they died their ghosts were no longer bound to what we know as time, and to try to prevent their own deaths they started the ghost rumour. Creating a paradox where they are doomed to fall off the cliff and repeat their destruction. Forever.

/u/LlamaHunter

Just your average everyday bootstrap paradox. Nothing to see here folks.

At the edge,
at the edge,
where the air is thin,
And the mist descends and the dreams begin,
And the waters flow,
And the waters grow,
And the waters whisper,
soft and slow ...

At the edge,
at the edge,
where you walk alone,
And the tracks are dust and the steps are stone,
And the edge is near,
And the edge is fear,
And the edges, made in shade, appear ...

And the mist descends,
And your steps are stone,
And the tracks are dust,
And you walk alone,
And the water flows,
And the dreams begin,

"Though I hate to invent

And examined the facts

His dad died. It was really shitty.

Before that he was popular, but also smart, motivated, a great athlete and actually a great guy and person. As much as you can be till you’re 15.

Then his dad died right before he was going to have a football game, heart attack in the shower before they were gonna leave for it.

We heard about it later, and basically, from there, everything seemed to decline. He became angry as you could expect, and I think looking back you’d expect a decline in everything at first.

But he just spiralled deeper and deeper. We didn’t see him for a while, when I did catch up with him later in high school he’d been so into drugs his brain literally seemed fried. It was sad for every reason.

The thing about living - the thing about life -
It’s doubt and it’s pain
and it’s struggle and strife -
It’s bearing the bad times -
it’s riding the rough -
It’s knowing you tried,
but it wasn’t enough.

It's waking at night with the thought in your mind -
That all you were planning is always behind -
That all you were growing is dying or dead -
That all you were dreaming is all in your head.

You hope in your heart that you'll start to succeed -
You hope and you hope that you'll get what you need -
You hope that you'll find that it's fine and it's fair -

The thing about life is it just doesn't care.

When I made him cry. He had been bullying me at school every day for nearly three years (for two things I had no control over, my poverty and my physical appearance- I badly needed braces my family could not afford) at that point, and I had had enough. I had discovered that he was adopted, so I told him, in front of our classmates, that his real parents probably wanted no part of him because they could tell he'd grow up to be nothing but a piece of shit. I got in trouble for that, but it was worth it to see him cry for once, and he left me alone after that.

Be rude and unpleasant and soon you will find -
That nobody cares when you're speaking your mind.
Your words will be many - your friends will be few -
And no one will worry what happens to you.

Be cruel and insensitive, soon you will see -
That being unhappy is all you can be.
They won't take you with them - or care when you're gone.

They won't really miss you.

They'll simply move on.

When you're busy detox-drinkin',
What you're puttin' in...

They were gone for a few weeks, they come home, their two giant huskies are happy, I get paid and all was well. A couple weeks later my mom calls me laughing and laughing - my parents had dinner with the friends I dog sit for and they showed a video to my parents from the front door cam. Apparently all it showed was me sprinting full speed down the hallway, a dog toy in hand, biggest stupid grin on my face, followed by the two huskies running and sliding after me, followed by me, followed by the huskies....over and over and over and over again.

I sit for them as often as I can.

I dog sit for some neighbors, one of which told me she has a camera in the living room/dining room for her dogs. You know those ones that dispense treats? Anyways I thought it was a strange essential oil diffuser until she told me what it was. I was being paid to play with them for an hour but she found out that I was actually staying for two or three hours. When she asked me about it I think I said something like "I'd want someone to do the same for my dog". Ever since then she leaves me treats in the kitchen and even got me a Christmas present "from the dogs"

They take me out to pee at night.
I wear a leash all day.
My hair is clean,
my teeth are white.
They keep it just that way.

I fall to sleep beside their bed.
They look below with pride.
And when they wake, they scratch my head,
And take me back outside.

I sometimes howl to see the moon.
And though I am a man -

They cut my bollocks off last June.

That wasn't in the plan.

/u/The_Best_Yak_Ever

Watched her outside playing with my dogs (she was dog sitting). Our yellow Labrador and golden retriever puppy started munching the blueberries right now off our blueberry bushes. They know damn well they're not supposed to get into the blueberry patch... We watched our dog sitter run over to them and try to get them to stop. She then ran inside, and ran back out with a bowl. She proceeded to race the dogs for the blueberries. Had to be one of the highlights of our trip. We came home to a bowl of blueberries in the fridge and two very guilty puppers.

/u/notFREEfood

One of the dogs my family had when growing up developed a taste for blackberries. We tried to discourage him from eating them through various means, but nothing was out of reach for him, and he had the ability to tell precisely when they ripened. Even though we had the vines tied up off the ground, he'd still get them - if you caught him in the act you'd see him on his hind legs giving a careful sniff to identify the ripe ones, then delicately pluck each of them off the vine. God I miss that blackberry thief.

God I miss that blackberry thief.

I often stop a time or two
At where you used to be -
And when I do
I think of you,
And all you meant to me.

I stop to see the empty space -
I think of you and smile -
You made the world a finer place
For just a little while.

But time was only passing by
Before you had to go -
And though I understand the why,
I wish it wasn't so.

You're always more than just a pet -
And that can never end.

A part of life I can't forget.

A piece of me.

A friend.

Develop healthy habits NOW. Proper nutrition, a steady sleep schedule, regular exercise, etc. You are in a fantastic position to build a healthy lifestyle that will elevate your quality of life for the rest of it. It is much, much harder to change existing unhealthy habits that have been established for years. Most people aren't able to. Give yourself the best chance for a lifetime of health and happiness now.

So this isn't a tangible thing I wish I had, but I have a 14-year-old son and the one thing that I really admire about him and his entire friend group is that they are so open with their feelings with one another. It sounds cheesy, but it seems like kids in this current generation are much more okay with letting each other know they care. There's just an openness with them all that I find refreshing. It's something that I didn't experience in my sad-goth-staring-out-the-window late '90s high school days, and I really love it about all those kids.

#2949 – Bank tellers of reddit: What is your plan if someone sends bees through the tube?

2020-02-17 13:54:46

/u/stlubc

/u/TheSkorpion

Alright son you asked for it, Here’s how you rob a bank with bees. First off, Bumblebees ain’t gonna cut it here. Honey loving bumblebees don’t rob banks. They stay home and make honey.

Now we can opt for the adorable Africanized Killer Bee, But my recommendation is to go with the Wasps, If you have the budget of course. As bees are limited to 1 sting per bee, The wasps and hornets don’t have such limitations. Honestly, using bees is like trying to rob a bank with a crossbow. It’s not a good idea.

Speaking of wasps, And you really prefer American, The classic Paper Wasps and Yellowjackets can be controlled relatively well with a good and healthy queen.

For small town banks, You have many choices. But if you’re looking for something more robust, intimidating, The Japanese Hornet, Suzumbachi will be your best bet. It’s great size, aggressiveness and ferocity will attract and lure gun fire, As any person with a gun will immediately be tempted to shoot it. They also say “Fuck your tube.” Which will leave you basically free reign throughout the bank. Make sure to lather wasp essence on yourself so you don’t get stung yourself. And they will hover near you and land on you and love you like a dog. Recently in China, There has been a new discovery on a even bigger, badder Godzilla Hornet but regretfully I haven’t had the pleasure of working with them.

Once the wasps and or hornets are released, You will have a small window of time to rob the bank. Good luck friend.

Edit: Thank you for the love. For my gratitude, Please enjoy the high resolution photos I’ve picked out for you.

Edit: I looked into Godzilla hornets a little more, Most if not all studies published are in Chinese. Took me a while to find out where to find them. Also a better article straight from the source. Bumblebees do make honey, A tiny amount that they eat on occasion. Bees are friends.

orchard), went fishing regularly, and had a full pantry of home-canned goods and plenty of fresh eggs. I did not realize until I was older that we were considered poor in the general sense. I thought we had a fantastic lifestyle.

Pasty, vainly braced -

There he worked it, winding, waiting,
Turning, twisting, twirled, rotating,
Training hard with will abating,
Bold resolve misplaced.

So his firmness failed and faded -

“To begin with,” he said,
”let us start with the whoop -
With the ‘cough’, shall we say, that repeats on a loop -
With the noise from your mouth, and the noise in my ear,”
And he frowned,
”with the sound
I’m dumbfounded to hear.

“For you see,” he declared,
”that it just isn’t right -
But it’s really okay,

I'm not a doctor but a nurse.

There was a geriatric patient taking advantage of the call bell, because she was an attention seeker. She always needed really basic things to get done for her because she thought the place was a hotel (it was a rehabilitation ward, and we should try to motivate patients to do as much for themselves as possible).

She would ring the bell for reasons like "please lift the blanket up for me" or "please pass me my phone" or "please feed me" and claimed that her hands didn't work. I caught her several times lifting herself off the bed with her hands, grabbing her phone when it rang, you get the gist.

After days of saying no and that she needs to start doing things for her self, she grew more and more frustrated. Eventually she snapped, grabbed me by my collar, shook me aggressively and yelled "what don't you understand about the fact that my hands don't work?!?!"

I didn't know what to tell her... I just looked at her and blinked as she slowly released her death grip off me.

I guess I healed her hands. Praise the Lord. 1 up vote = one prayer for an old ladies arthritis.

She looked at her fingers.

She knew what she'd done.

The last of her lies had been crafted and spun.

But now it was over.
'twas no going back.

She picked up her bags
and she started to pack.

I'm an ICU and ER nurse. We get a lot of malingering in the ER. One day, one of our frequent fliers came in and started faking a seizure in triage. Now obviously I know this lady and she's fake-seized a million times before. But this time it's in the lobby in front of about 30 people, who have no way of knowing that it's fake.

She's lolling around on the floor making a damn fool of herself and folks look horrified. I walked up to her and said calmly:

"Karen. What are you doing?"

To which this genius responds, "I'M SEIZING!"

I told her to stop seizing. So she did.

Edit: no, her name wasn't actually Karen. I just did that for confidentiality.

#2939 – How do you control yourself when you are full of rage and want to keep calm?

/u/Ryozaaki

/u/drodrey

I'm a very calm person, but teach calming techniques to emotionally disturbed kids.

The biggest help I've found is finding a technique which grounds you and reminds you where you are in the present. I teach lots of different ones, including:

- clench and unclench your toes, focus on the feeling of your feet on the floor while you do it.
- breath in and out so deeply you feel like your ribs are being pulled apart and knitted back together.
- Grab something near you, could be a pole, table whatever, and clench and unclench around it.
- Walk, while counting your steps.

- Do something rhythmic, I like bouncing a ball personally but can be anything, from using a stamp to skipping.

All research shows when you reach “red mist” your rationality is gone and you just have to last it out. Your best bet is to recognise when you’re losing control and utilise grounding techniques before you’re past the point of no return.

When Little Timmy grabbed a throat,
And held it very tight -
He grasped and squeezed and paused to gloat -
And went to jail that night.

“A prison’s full of fearsome folk,”
His father grumbled, gruff -
”You’ll have to make your mark,” he spoke,
”To show them all you’re tough!”

So Timmy chose the biggest six,
And loudly, proudly cried -
”I hear you’ve all got tiny dicks!”

And Timmy fucking died.

It wasn't disastrous for the couple as much as it was the restaurant. I used to work at a small southeastern franchise restaurant, it wasn't anything you could mistake for upscale. We had someone call in and ask if we could fry the ring he was planning to propose with in a hush puppy. Extremely weird request, but we said sure.

They come in to eat with their families, she gets her order of hush puppies, doesn't choke on the ring and seems excited enough. Stayed at the table for about two hours total and chatted.

They dined and dashed.

Edit: Had no idea there would be a ton of confusion over what a hush puppy was. In America (or at least the south) a hush puppy is a fried ball of corn meal. I promise it tastes better than what it sounds like.

He sips at his drink, and he waits for a while.

He watches.
She spells out the way that she feels.
He picks up his fork

I was a waitress many moons ago, and two couples spring to mind. The first were an older couple who were dressed nicely. They were polite and cordial to me, but not overly enthusiastic or friendly. They were at the table for a little over an hour and a half, and we didn't see them say one word to each other during that time. Every time I went over to their table, the atmosphere felt like I'd walked straight into an argument, but they weren't speaking, or looking at each other or anything. It very quickly became awkward as fuck.

The second couple was meant to be having a proposal dinner. The guy had rung to book a table, and had let us know he was going to propose during dessert. He'd given the ring to kitchen staff so we could bring it out with a cake, and he'd got some balloons and streamers too. Anyway, he walks in a couple of steps behind his partner - everyone has big grins for them both - but he grits his teeth and shakes his head, surreptitiously dragging his finger across his throat pantomime style. Great. Oh, and lucky me, they're seated in my section. It's obvious she was bloody furious with him about something; she spends the first half of the meal seething quietly, and the second having a constant pop at him. While she was in the loo, the manager made me double check he didn't want us to bring the ring out or anything. "Fuck, no!" was his response. I felt really bad for him, she really was mean!

“Fuck, no!” was his response.

I wanted to marry you, really I did -
A wish and a dream that I'd had as a kid -
A hope in my head that I'd hoped would come true -
The thought of a woman as pretty as you.

I always imagined your kindness, your grace -
The love in your eye and the smile on your face -
The sigh in your voice and the red on your cheek -
The pledges, the promise you'd hasten to speak.

I knew how I wanted the moment to be -
A ring in my hand as I bent to a knee -
A hope in my heart for the future in front.

But fuck it.

I think that you're kind of a cunt.

You'll pick your perfect point of view;

You'll blindly feed the frame of mind
That keeps you feeling right -

You'll hold your old perspectives strong,
And safe behind a wall.

And every night, before I sleep -
Before the gentle dreams I keep Inside my dozing, drifting mind
Where wizards pose and lizards find
A place to chart a trip to stars,
Or start a ship in space to Mars,
Or take a plane to somewhere new,
A car, a train to timbuktu -

I put my worries out of reach -
I dream about the waves, the beach
The wind, the sun, the fish, the foam,
And make a wish to run, to roam
To where the air is scented breeze
And fair between contented trees
That sing a song of love to keep -

And then I wake.

And wish for sleep.

I walked into a public bathroom at a beach and found a big bearded guy nervously staring at the ceiling above the stall while using the only urinal. As I stepped past him toward the stall, he screamed “STOP!”

Since his hands were full of dick, he could only gesture upward with his head. I looked up and saw a very large pigeon sitting in a nest in the corner. With a super thick Slavic dialect, bearded guy says, “Never trust a mother bird.” He washed his hands, still staring at the nest, and backed out of the bathroom.

/u/HurrDurrDethKnet

In his defense, he did you a solid. Birds might fuck you up if you get too close to their nests.

/u/riali29

The university I went to had Canada Geese lay their nests near the front doors of busy buildings. They had to cordon off the nests with caution tape and “AGGRESSIVE GOOSE” signs because they’re ruthless.

When Little Timmy saw a goose,
Inside a paddock penned -
He softly shook the breadcrumbs loose
He'd brought to feed his friend.

“You're such a pretty bird,” he said,
”Of grace and wing unique -
And that is why I've brought this bread
To fill your pretty beak!

“I want you for a pet,” said Tim,
And gladly climbed inside.

He watched it slowly turn to him.

And Timmy fucking died.

#2920 – Anyone, what are some stories you have wanted to tell people but haven’t had the right askreddit question to answer?

2020-01-30 19:07:22

When I was in high school I threw a party and a friend drunkenly put a hole in the wall right by the entrance. My parents would be back in a little over 24hrs. The day following the party I went to Home Depot and explained to the guy working there my situation. To which he basically told me “ yeah dude, you don’t have enough time to fix a hole in the wall “ After getting all the supplies, I figured I was good to go out with some friends for a while, come home and quickly fix the wall.

I come home from being out around 10pm, giving me about 12 hours before my parents would come home. I fill up the hole with the mesh and sheetrock. Now it’s all filled up and smooth, still wet and obviously a different color than the wall itself. I remembered that my mom painted the wall herself a few years back and there are still paint cans left over in the basement.

After grabbing a can that matched the color of the wall I got ready to cover the spot. The second I painted onto the wall I immediately noticed the paint color was too dark. It’s the same color but a much darker shade so my mom must’ve thought it was too dark and added white to lighten the color. So, I go back to the basement for white paint. I spend the next few hours trying to find the right shade that my mom used so once painted the wall would match in color with the surrounding walls. After an eternity I finally get the right color! It’s 3-4am at this point and I paint the whole wall.

Once I’m done the wall looks great, you can’t even tell there was ever a hole. My next obvious issue is the smell of paint. One step into the house and my parents would immediately know something isn’t right, it reeks of paint. That’s when I remembered seeing a can of blue paint in the basement. I grab the blue paint and a poster board used from a school project and make a sign saying WELCOME HOME. I then hang the sign in the same room as the wet wall, on an opposite wall to draw attention there and off the painted wall. I purposely leave the can of blue paint there on the floor with the lid off to help sell the reason for the strong smell of paint.

Then I went to bed, exhausted and with only a few hours to spare. I woke up when they arrived to greet them/ see if I was gunna get busted or not. My plan worked like a charm! I got away with it. They loved the welcome home sign. I know what you must be wondering, but what about the wet paint!? There's no way it dried in time! You're right, it was 100% still wet when they arrived, I just prayed nobody would touch the wall!

That's one of my stories I'm actually very proud of! That was over 10yrs ago and I'm still just as proud today of that accomplishment as I was back then.

Edit: For those assuming my parents knew but went along with it. There's a 0% chance of that, my parents were insanely strict, my dad especially. In fact, a few weeks before, I had already got in trouble for having people over and the neighbors ended up calling my parents to complain about the noise.

/u/loCAtek

You should be worshiped as a trickster god.

And late he lies awake in bed,
A whirl of worlds inside his head
That slowly wane away in sleep,
And dance beyond the dark and deep.

He boards a floating boat of dreams,
And sails along the silver seams,
And all the cares and doubts of day
Dissolve
and dim
and drift away.

He rides along a tide of stars,
A ship, a trip to Earth and Mars,
Where all the morning's fears and more
And all his woes are all before.

He moves beyond the black behind
Without a thought to fill his mind,
Except for one -

a sentence, small:

"... I can't believe that worked at all."

When the tide travels in, and the sunlight has set -

I will miss you forever,

“The Day God Created Mosquitoes”

When God was enjoying a wonderful day -
He coloured the ocean, the sea and the spray.
He peppered the planet with forests of trees -
With sweet subtle scents on a warm summer's breeze.

He crafted the kitten, and when he was done -
Perfected the pup and the penguin for fun.
He playfully reached in the depths of his mind -
And found all the finest of Animal Kind.

'A toast,' he exclaimed, 'to the things that I've made!
The creatures I've crafted, the plans that I've laid!'
And so with fulfilment, content to his core,
He knocked back a whiskey... and poured himself
more.

The following morning he woke in a daze.
He woke with a head full of headache and haze.
He woke with a groan and a moan of distress.
He woke and he rose, and his place was a mess.

The whiskey was empty.
The cupboards were bare.
He'd drank till the dawn of the morn in his chair.
And when all his liquors had passed by his lip -
He'd conjured a spirit for spirits to sip.

'Good Heavens,' he whispered, 'oh boy, what a night -
At least nothing happened,' he said with delight.
He walked to his workshop.
He went for his key.
He stared with dismay, and he said 'oh my me.'

His organised boxes of animal parts -
The toes and the noses, the lungs and the hearts - He'd spilled them; he'd mixed them and filled them and split.

He'd opened the box that said Horrible Shit.

'Oh Jesus,' said Jesus, from somewhere behind.
'You've got to stop drinking each time you've designed!'
But God heard the buzzing.
He whispered with doubt:

'I'm sure that it's nothing to worry about...'

Holy shit. That's unexpected! And this sub has almost 400k members!

He always said the nicest stuff -
The decent thing to say -
He told me once: "... you are enough;
Have faith you know the way."

He told me once: "... you are the best,
You are the brightest too -
You are the first, and all the rest
Are second-best to you."

And that was all he said to me,
Until one winter's eve -
I asked him what his name might be.

He said:

"... 'tis Rimjob Steve."

And the future's hard to see -
And the future is a curtain
Unrevealing what may be -

Be there sadness,

Be there gladness,

But I'll still be masturbating.

/u/bustypirate

I’ve told this story before and could go into a ton of detail but here’s the short version.

I am 100% sure I vividly remember a dog that apparently doesn’t exist. When I was 16 we lived on the other side of the province and my uncle had this little jack russell named Crue. Crue went missing for several months and then turned up at a humane society over an hour away and we were all shocked this little dog has made it so far.

anyway that was almost 20 years ago and the other day I was talking to my parents and was like you know “when-ever I hear about Jack Russells I think about Crue and that stunt he pulled” and they had no idea what I was talking about. Insisted my uncle had never had such a dog, I must have dreamed it, etc. Honestly anyone else who would have remembered this dog has been dead for a long time and I don’t even have any pictures of my uncle. I have absolutely no way to prove this dog existed but I’m sure that he did.

/u/baby_yoda71

They may have just forgotten, my parents are like this as well. Not that long ago I was telling them about a letter I had written to my dad while he was away a few years ago. They both insisted I must have dreamt it, but I found it not long after. Sometimes people can be forgetful, it doesn’t necessarily mean Crue didn’t exist. :)

/u/bustypirate

Very true, it was a chaotic time, my uncle passed away very unexpectedly shortly before we moved and everything felt like a whirlwind. I still wish I could prove or disprove the existence of this dog because I remember him SO vividly and my family does not. not even my brothers, though they were much younger and don't remember much about that time at all.

The dog, and all it used to do -
The dog I'm sure I can recall -

Might not, in fact, exist...

Taking the trash out at night, super remote area so I know for a fact we’re the only ones around here, getting close to the road and I hear very clearly “help me” from a female voice. Even knowing there’s such a slim chance of there being another living person around, I still feel like I should look around and check it out in case I wasn’t just hearing things and someone actually needs help. Take about two steps in the direction I thought I heard it, hear a giggle in the same exact voice, turn around and walk promptly back up the driveway because fuck that shit. Anyone who actually needed help wouldn’t be laughing, I don’t think.

/u/halfmanhalfskelton

Oh fuck that, good instinct

“Help,” she whispers softly, gently,
All despairing,
all-intently,
Full of fear and small surrender,
Hushed and muted,
faint and tender.

“Help,” she whispers softly, sweetly,
All serenely,
all-completely,
Full of grins and glee, beguiling,
Luring, tempting,
coaxing, smiling.

”Help,” she whispers softly, nearer,
Nearing, creeping, closer, clearer,
Eyes inside the darkness gleaming,
Glinting,
crawling,
laughing,
screaming.

I had just pulled into the parking lot of where I worked and was walking towards the building. It was like 3 in the afternoon, broad daylight.

All of a sudden, I heard an ambulance's siren start sounding. Naturally, I looked down the road to try and see the ambulance. I see it approaching and decided to watch it for a bit. It was quickly getting closer, and it was about to pass right by me. However, there was a large SUV waiting to turn out of the parking lot and onto the road, blocking a few meters of the road from my view. The ambulance passed behind the SUV, probably about 50 feet away from me at most, and I vividly remember the siren becoming completely silent in that instant. The ambulance had vanished entirely as it passed behind that SUV.

I was so confused. The road did not have many cars on it at the time, and it was broad daylight. I did a triple-take and made sure that I didn't just miss it. I had a clear view of the road going both directions, and there was no more ambulance to be seen. No more siren either. I walked up and down the road, trying to find it for a solid minute. But nope, it was gone. I was well rested, not on drugs, and I didn't have a history of hallucinations. It seems dismissible, but I was completely aware of what happened, and I can't explain it to this day.

/u/liberatedman

As someone who used to have such hallucinations, security footage helps a great deal. Also a pet is really useful. If they aren't responding, I could relax.

And do not seem the things they seem -
And all my thoughts are all a dream -

A cabin in the woods, near a river. Solid and beautiful. Lots of windows, and an incredible view. It'll smell like cedar and pipe tobacco. A simple wood shop, and maybe a small painting studio. A large wood-burning fireplace. A cozy kitchen; nothing fancy. Really good coffee in mismatched mugs. Plenty of bourbon and wine. Loooots of books, and enough time to actually read them. Walks in the woods with my wife and dog. Fishing, canoeing, and shore lunches. Watching wildlife. Drawing and painting. A nice little town nearby (but just far enough away) with a good bookstore, an old diner, and a lively tavern (need a spot to watch those Packers games). A well-seasoned and reliable old truck to get us there and back. Long days with my wife, listening to music (on vinyl), laughing, cooking, making love. Never feeling bored, never feeling rushed. Time enough to be able to just be us, and do all those things we never seem to get around to doing.

A friend of mine is a cop. He just told me of a guy they found dead in his kitchen. The stove and heater were on and he was naked. They assumed he was just cooking while naked. You know, how we all do from time to time. He was dead for at least three days. When they lifted him up to turn him around, his penis had sort of melted to the kitchen floor. As they pulled him upwards, the dangling participle stretched off the floor like a rubber band and released. Slingshotting back to the body. It sounded absolutely disgusting as he described it.

Police detective here. In a rural area a guy had passed away in his yard. In July. It was 8 days before someone found him. He was partially liquified, there were flies everywhere and the stench was quite nasty. The knowing where this fly were before they landed on your face did not help. They fuck you up, some movies do.
They pull you in with sleight of hand.
They show you things you trust are true,
And make you think you understand.

But then they add a word, a scene,
And all those things you thought you knew
Are not the things you think they mean.

They fuck you up, some movies do.

Fisher Price

I bought a baby swing at a second-hand market. It was about 5 years old but it still worked great. Only, when we set it up at home, I discovered it was missing the waist straps that form part of the harness.

On a whim, I called up Fisher Price and asked if there was some way to order the straps. The customer service person looked up the serial number of the swing and immediately sent me a new set of straps free of charge.

When I asked why they were sending me new straps, even though I had been honest and told them I had gotten the swing second hand, I was told that Fisher Price is dedicated to the safety of babies and children and that they will always back up their products, no matter how old they are or how they were bought.

It may be an image thing or a liability thing but I was honestly blown away by the level of customer service they offered.

/u/Isord

Dude Fisher Price stuff lasts fucking forever too. WE have Fisher Price “Little People” toys that are like 30+ years old at this point and have been used by every single generation in our family.

THIS

They gathered in factions.
They gathered in groups.
They gathered in crowds and in classes and troops.
They gathered by choosing.
They gathered by chance.
In posses and parties they planned their advance.

They gathered and plotted.
They gathered and schemed.
They gathered and crafted and drafted and dreamed.
They gathered and readied.
They gathered and hence -
In clubs and in clusters they planned their offense.

They gathered and gathered - they gathered again -
They gathered and gathered and gathered and then -
They came on a night that was silent and black.

And no one survived in the castle attack.

There was an old kids’ book or poem or something where a kid does this. Someone gives him a dollar, and he trades it for two quarters (because two is more than one), then three dimes, etc.

He comes back with a handful of pennies and is super proud of himself.

/u/OakenBones

Shel Silverstein’s “Smart”!

My dad gave me one dollar bill ‘Cause I’m his smartest son,
And I swapped it for two shiny quarters ‘Cause two is more then one! And then I took the quarters And traded them to Lou For three dimes– I guess he didn’t know That three is more than two! Just then, along came old blind Bates And just ‘cause he can’t see He gave me four nickels for my three dimes, And four is more than three! And I took the nickels to Hiram Coombs Down at the seed-feed store, And the fool gave me five pennies for them, And five is more than four!
And I went and showed my dad, And he got red in the cheeks
And closed his eyes and shook his head– Too proud of me to speak!

When Little Timmy's brother said:

He softly spoke, "until you've bled,
You're hardly beating, bro.

"You need to punch the scrote, the sack,
The nads, the nuts, the stones -
Until they're blue and turning black,
Or scarred and hard as bones!"

So Timmy made a fist and then,
He punched,
he punched with pride.

And punched and punched his balls again.

“No, sir.” That is the correct response. Even if you’re doing 90 in a 15 with a kilo of coke strapped to the roof. “No, sir.” They’re fishing. And the question is either absurd or condescending, depending on how you look at it.

“Do you know why I pulled you over?”

I thought of all he said a while,
And with the first of sighs -
A furrowed brow and half a smile,
I thought about replies.

I thought of all I ought to say:
... perhaps you'd like to screw?
Perhaps you'll hold my Mary J,
And guns and donuts too?

Perhaps you've come to share a beer?
Or smoke a dash of crack?
I've got a few right under here,
Don't worry - I'm not black.

I thought of all I might have said,
Like how or where to go -
But all I did was shake my head,
And all I said was:

” ... no.”

I dream about the waves, the beach
The wind, the sun, the fish, the foam,
And make a wish to run, to roam
To where the air is scented breeze
And fair between contented trees,
And in the lake I take a leap...

And then I wake.

Admitting when they’re wrong/apologising/taking responsibility

/u/somethingelse19

My dad always apologized to me when I was a child. I now realize how many adults refuse to apologise or acknowledge how they’ve hurt their child due to ego, etc.
I really value now when an adult can say they were wrong and are sorry, especially to a child.

/u/Esoteric_Erric

Dad here. I felt it was very important to let my kids see that we are fallible.
In situations where it was a mistake I made but not necessarily an apology situation (like, a driving mistake, or just losing my cool or being impatient somewhere), in the presence of my kids, a minute or two later I might say to them “I really shouldn’t have done that” or said that, or been so impatient. Etc.

I think the kind of human I’d like to raise would reflect on morality and be introspective, and by apologizing / acknowledging flaws it not only lets kids see that parents are human and flawed but it also stimulates them to think about these things for themselves.

/u/Lance_Henry1

One of the hardest things to accept as a child is that our parents are human - which can often make their mistakes so much more hurtful because of our naive thinking that they are infallible or otherwise have a code of conduct that is unattainable.

Things like divorce or dad dating someone after mom’s death is seen as a terrible injustice - and we only learn that lesson that we children (now as adults) held them to a standard we couldn’t comprehend.

One of the hardest things to accept as a child is that our parents are human - which can often make their mistakes so much more hurtful because of our naive thinking that they are infallible or otherwise have a code of conduct that is unattainable.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 1

“Now listen son - beneath those smalls,
There’s warts as large as bowling balls
Of Hepatitis A and B
And C,” or so he said to me,

Then sighed aloud and shook his head -
"You've syphilis," the doctor said,
"And scabies, kid, with pubic lice
And herpes too, and harvest mice
Between a nest of hair and cheese,
And they're not even STDs!"
He stood and paced,
He clenched a fist,
While poking each and every cyst
That swelled and bulged and burst to leak
Between each decomposing cheek
And parasite-infested ass
In potent clouds of methane gas.

"My god!" he said, "what have you done?
Where have you been, my wayward son?
What rotten monster have you thought
To share as one?" he cried, distraught -
"There's not a pill across the Earth
Could fix you now, for what it's worth!
Forget the cure! It's clear to me
I'd better call the CDC
(And really pretty fucking quick)
To quarantine your putrid dick!"
He said and sat in seconds flat.
"Where were you, buddy? Tell me that."

He eyed my rat-infested cock.

I sadly said: "... on reddit, doc."

#2857 – How would you feel about a law that requires anybody that wants to be a parent to be able to pass a competency test and parenting course before being allowed to have a baby?

2019-12-30 23:32:30

/u/ffffuckkkkk

/u/Conocoryphe

See, the problem with this concept is that there are different people with conflicting ideas on how to raise a child. But if there is one test that people need to pass, this means that parents would have to raise their kids in the same way, as there is apparently one correct way to parent. But who gets to decide what good parenting is? What if the person in charge decides that people should raise their kids to be selfish assholes? Or if the test only tests general intelligence, then who decides how low the bar is set? Will 50% of the population be able to have children? 70%? 10%? Who gets to decide how smart you have to be in order to procreate?

The other option is that there are multiple different tests with different correct answers. But then it is easy for people to give certain people different tests based on arbitrary things like physical appearance, heritage, skin color, sexuality, etc.

There was a time in the USA when black people had to pass a 'logic test' before being able to legally vote. While I definitely see the advantage of a global competency test for parenting, I think such a system would definitely end up being abused for evil purposes.

“Of course I would love him -
I’d love him a lot.
I’d treat him with kindness,
for how could I not?
I’d love him with never a doubt or deceit -
Forever and ever contented, complete.

“I’d show him the world, and the sun,
and the stars -
And teach him to shoot for the moon and for Mars!
I’d hold him, I’d help him, defend him from fear -
Of course I would love him - that’s why I am here.”

The government worker began his routine -
”I’m sorry, that’s not what it says on my screen.”
He frowned and he turned to her slowly and sighed.

He took out her form and he stamped it:

DENIED.

Simple etiquette stuff:

THOU SHALT BRING HEADPHONES. No one judges the guy who is morbidly obese as long as he's working out politely. Listen to music without headphones though... I don't care if you're Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson. There is a special place in hell for you.

Wipe off equipment when you're done, especially if you're sweaty. It's good etiquette and people will respect you for it. Re-rack your weights before moving on to a different exercise. This tells everyone that you're done using that equipment and it's fair game now. The first gym I went to was notoriously bad about this. Since nobody did it, people would swoop in and grab equipment even if someone was 20 steps away. My current gym is way better so you can be confident that no one will steal your equipment if you have to step away for a little while, and conversely you won't have to worry about stealing someone else's equipment because you'll know someone's using it.

Related to 3. Don't sit on equipment you're not using. A short break is fine between sets, but if you're sitting there for 5 minutes in a crowded gym while people are waiting to use that bench, you're doing it wrong.

Follow the rules. They're not often stringent, but they're there so that everyone can complete their workout in a timely, efficient, and enjoyable manner.

If you have a question about form, you can ask someone else. Most people will be very friendly. But don't distract people in the middle of reps. That happens sometimes. No one will chew your head off, but it's an annoyance.

TL;DR Be courteous. AND MOST IMPORTANTLY, BRING HEADPHONES.

This thread needs a happy story.

My first husband and I married pretty young after college. We were generally happy, but it seemed like our lives were moving in different directions (geographically and metaphysically). We split up. We dated other people: went through the motions, mechanically– loved other people, sure; but without the sense of destiny and certainty we had with one another. Finally, over a decade after breaking it off, we got back together and have never been happier. Now we have the life experience to know that what we have is irreplaceably special. The stupid small things that seemed problematic back then, we now know to be non-issues. We've seen so many other couples fight and struggle for what we have naturally. We're so, so lucky.

/u/Veruca5alt

Great story! Merry Christmas :)

I remember the way
That I thought about love -
It was rockets and bells,
It was dreams from above.
But it came without fuss,
And it came without flair -
And before I could look,
It was already there.

I remember the way ...

... but I cannot recall
How it happened to be
That we found it at all.

See it wasn't a shock,
For we already knew
That your future was me,
And my future was you.

Yo dude. It is not all bad.

My dad told me on his hospital bed when I was venting about my recent break-up that "every experience is a good one, if you walk away from it with something". Be it a lesson or something else.

What are we as a person, but a sum of what we've been through?

You are a stronger person than before the experience.

I wish you all the best my dude.

Edit: Thank you all for sharing your experiences. I am happy for the upvotes not for the sake of karma, but the visibility it brings to this sentiment. I am glad this exchange between me and my father could possibly help someone across the globe just by being read here.

/u/ToenailCheesd

It's hard to see this in the moment but I learned so much from each break up, became a better person and better at relationships, and now I'm happily married and we just had a little girl. I wouldn't be here if I hadn't been able to learn from my past!

I wouldn't be here if I hadn't been able to learn from my past!

I've heard it said before in rhyme,
To speak of loss and pain:
*While open cuts will heal in time,
The hidden scars remain.*

They're buried, caught and kept in sighs,
In doubts, and broken dreams -
In broken hopes and homes and cries,
And broken hearts, it seems.

And yet, one day the pain will ease -
You'll wake, and when it's cleared -
Those scars will serve as memories
For how you persevered.

Last I checked this had 3 upvotes.... here goes. Full time single dad here. I was living in Maryland and met a woman from Texas. We dated long distance for two years. And yes we had multiple in person meetings. She would travel up and spend time with us. I was planning on leaving the east coast for a long time prior and had found a job and had family support in my hometown in Washington state. I came to Texas to visit her, we talked about joining families as she was a single mother. I decided 48 hours before leaving Maryland to go back home that I wanted to take my shot at making this work. My grandfather had just died and I think he would have told me to take the chance. I had been job hunting in TX and had a position lined up in Austin a couple hours from her. I work in a small field and it was the only opportunity. Long story short I moved here and within 4 weeks I got dumped. I have faults in this too, of course. But its been two years now and I still die inside when I think about being home. Im alone with my son here and especially on days like today, I miss my family. Don't be like me. Make rational choices and be careful of the green grass you think you see in the other field

This is what I needed to hear right now. Thankyou for your story. I'm in a similar situation. A merry Xmas to you from a stranger!

'Twas midnight when the bells were rung,
And all the Christmas songs were sung
In sight of softly falling snow

That dropped and drifted down below,
Where people watched with hope and glee
To spy the scene they'd dreamed to see -

The Christmas light;
the town awoke,
And through the clouds of chimney smoke,
They looked above to see the sleigh
That upped and rose and rolled away,
And with a merry, laughing call,
He cried: 'Goodnight, to one and all!'

They watched him go;
they shared a smile;
They warmed their hands, and for a while,
There were no gripes;
there were no grumps;
There were no doubts or Donald Trumps;
There were no fears;
there were no ends -
But only love, and only friends.

And so, to one, to all, and more,
For all ahead, and all before,
With festive fun,
and winter rhyme -

A very merry Christmas time.

Peroxide gets blood stains out

Edit: I'm a nurse not a serial killer

And that's when he saw as he opened the door -
A bath full of blood and a sink full of gore.
A rank ruby soup and a tub colored red -
An arm and an arm and an arm and a head.

He looked at the faces, the fingers, the toes -
The eyes and the ankles, the mouth and the nose.
The meat and the muscles that shone like a ham -
And all in a stew of peroxide they swam.

He stared with despair and with doubt and dismay -
Unmoving, unable to wander away.

She entered behind him.

She muttered a curse.

She took out her scalpel.

She said: "... I'm a nurse."

I'm still waiting for the opportunity to shine with my knowledge on how to properly put out that kind of fire. For some reason my food never bursts into flame while I'm cooking.

/u/musicstan7

I set my popcorn pot on fire (by heating the oil and forgetting to add the kernels) in my mom's house a few years ago. Thank god she was there and knew how to put it out because I was useless, all I did was scream.

I'm really sorry, but I'm picturing you freaking out like a Sim while your mom puts out the fire, and it's hilarious.

A jar of sauce, a slice of cheese -

He sees a tub that's brown and old,
And through a screen of green and mold,
He spies the chunky orange glow
Of soup he made four weeks ago.

He shuts the door in damned defeat,
And says: 'I've rarely food to eat,'
And sadly sighs aloud and then -

He opens up the fridge again.

Make him brush his damn teeth twice a day
*edit - Good to know I'm not the only one who feels this way!

/u/thenorthernscar

Oh god yes. As we speak I'm stuck on the toilet from the antibiotics I've been taking to kill the massive infection eating the bones in my face because I wasn't taught proper oral hygiene. 6 crowns, 1 failed crown that had to be turned to an implant, and surgical removal of a molar later, you'd think I'd have learned by now.

EDIT: I'm glad I've inspired so many of you to go brush, that's awesome! Everyone who has dental problems, you're not alone and it's never too late to pick up good habits. Don't forget to floss and the feeling of a good mouthwash is underrated so you should try that too!

Another Edit: A lot of people are asking how it got this bad. There is a genetics factor as both of my parents and 1 set of grandparents all have horrible teeth as well. I was also never made to brush my teeth as a child, didn't go to the dentist, and it just wasn't something that we did in my house. I also didn't have health classes in school that taught the importance of it. I didn't figure it out on my own until high school, and by then the damage was already done. This latest problem (having to have an implant) was kind of just bad luck. I had a crown that slid out of place ever so slightly, to where I didn't notice it. Bacteria got in the little crack and colonized in my gums. And it doesn't matter how much you brush, you can't reach underneath your teeth. So even though I have had good habits at this point (I don't floss as much as I should though) I can't fix past damage. I also live in America where sugar is a staple and dental care is insane even with insurance. Teeth are considered luxury bones here, and unfortunately teeth are also a "too little too late" type of problem.

Not mini, but massive with many to see!
His mouth is a river of pus in a flood!
His gums are awash with the colour of blood!

"Good heavens, it's simply amazing!" he said.
He leaned in to see and he just shook his head.
He stared in bemusement, confusion and doubt.

He picked up his pliers.

"... well let's get 'em out."

I read a comment on here a while back about a college kid who picked up an office job over one summer. He became friends with an older lady at the front desk who always needed help figuring out Excel.

He kept finding shortcuts for her, and eventually wrote scripts for her that took a load of work off her plate.

By the end of the summer he had made her job so easy that they decided they didn't need her to do it anymore. They fired her.

/u/hikingmutherfucker

OMG that happened at my work dude's only job was to get this report together and present it for a weekly meeting because the boss hated that meeting and the people at this meeting. Anyway dude was so lazy and drove us nuts asking for stuff for his report till me and another script jockey systems guy automated the whole thing for the person I mean all he ended up having to do is grab the report and attend one meeting. Once the meeting was eliminated they realized he was good for nothing else and laid him off first thing in the next round.

/u/Dirus

Yeah... I'm reading all these things about how they made a job a 1000 times easier and every time I'm just thinking, so they're going to fire the person whose main job was to do that.

/u/halkeye

They generally don't fire people they like. They first try to repurpose people since they gave company knowledge and that's expensive to gain.

They'll get rid of people that don't get along, or refuse to change or learn.

Then again. Sometimes it does happen

Yo our school nun would do this in meditation sessions but it would be like “you’re walking along a beach... is it sunrise or is it sunset? ... no it’s sunrise. You see fishermen by the shore, are they coming in, or going out? No. They’re coming in. You’re having breakfast with them.... are you having toast? Cereal? .... no you’re having fish.” DON’T GIVE US OPTIONS IF YOU HAVE AN IMAGE IN MIND ALREADY YA IRISH BITCH.

”Is it right?
Is it wrong?
No you’re wrong,” she professed.

So we heard
every word,
every word she’d suggest -
With a shake of her head
at the guess that we’d guessed -
And she’d ask

Yep, pretty much.

“I wish these lazy poor people would get off their ass and fix the environment. Everyone at the yacht club has been talking about the environment. Instead of grumbling about their meagre pay and financial problems, why don't we use the institutions of government to force them to plant some trees and fix the mess they created. Of course, we'll make all these exemptions for ourselves”

“But how can we, how can we make people care?
Through good education, or other means fair?
Through set regulations or sensible laws?
Or maybe we just ought to tackle the cause?”

“If maybe we outlaw the cause of the mess -
We won't need to stand here and pointlessly guess -
We won't need to think of a will or a way -
That treats but the wound while the knife's still in play.

“Perhaps that's the answer,” they said with a smile -
They pondered the problem, and thought for a while -
For one good decision would echo in waves.

They whispered: ”... nah, fuck it. Let's do it with slaves.”

Buttons, buckets, doors and droppers,

Blocks and rocks for every caper!

Beds and bars beneath your beacon,
Hungry hearts that start to weaken,
Wooden tables, wall dividers,
Enders, creepers, zombies, spiders!

Bones and bows and boots and brewings,
Darkly digging, deep undoings,
Deserts, forests, farms for feeding!

... Minecraft's all I'm really needing.

I'm Santa at parties and wandering around the neighborhood. The toughest was having a little girl wanted her father home from prison. That was awkward and I had to promise her that although some presents take several years to get, they are the most worth it when it happens. Added the usual assurance that her daddy missed her and loved her. It's a lot easier when they want Barbies.

Intern year doing surgery, guy gets brought in for a gunshot wound to the head. He was working at a jeweler that got robbed, his coworker was black bagged at the scene.

He gets brought into the trauma bay and it's pretty hectic because GSW to the head and well he's alive. Not only is he alive he's following commands but not speaking, probably from the shock.

Cops are giving us report saying he was likely shot with a .357 snub nose they recovered at the scene. So we do our primary and secondary survey and all this guy has is a single ~~would~~ wound to his left frontal scalp where the bullet went in.

So the team hasn't really seen something like this before. Sure a GSW to the head wasn't new but this guy was otherwise completely fine. The decision was made to get a quick frontal and lateral head X-ray to verify where the bullet was before proceeding to CT. Well we don't see any bullet on the films. There's no bullet on the board or bed or within the patient's clothes.

The man was shot in the head and the bullet bounced off his skull. CT showed no fracture even. It was wild, never seen anything like that since.

The man was shot in the head and the bullet bounced off his skull.

When Death arrives on wings of black

My college campus had a guy named Blades who wore sunglasses and rollerbladed around campus. Then he dyed his hair blue and cut it into a mohawk because he thought it would look cool, and everyone I was friends with started calling him Sonic the Shredhog.

/u/OrangeinDorne

Sounds like it worked. Sonic the Shredhog is a premium nickname

/u/maleorderbride

Probably the best one he had. Turns out not many people liked him on account of his personality being “I’m better than you at everything.”

Edit: One of my favorite stories about this guy was that Sonic was part of a friend group (kinda reluctantly on the part of everyone that wasn’t him) where a couple of those friends hatched a plan to come up with a fake philosopher that they would say they’d been studying. Shreddy was very much the type of person who let a conversation begin, then chimed in with the tone of “Ah yes, this subject with which I am most familiar and which your understanding is completely dwarfed by mine own,” so they wanted to test just how far he’d go with that. From what they told me, they even drafted a completely fake Wikipedia page complete with bio information and fake branch of philosophy (with its own fake Wikipedia page) that this guy’s work would be based on. They planned to put it into action over the summer and spring it on him in the fall when school was back in, but he didn’t return, so they never got the chance. Knowing him, I’m 100% sure it would have worked, though, so I’m sad I never got to see it in action.

One day at work we had an hour meeting followed by a planned pizza party as a reward for meeting some safety goal. They'd been telling us all week not to worry about food because they were getting pizza. Well after the meeting were sitting around waiting for the pizza to get there when our boss comes in and tells us there was a failure of communication and no one actually ordered the pizza. If you want to see 50 factory workers go from excited to murder ready in less than a second that's what you tell them.

/u/I_throw_socks_at_cat

I worked for a company that sent a global email congratulating us all for working hard and meeting a sales goal, so there would be free pizza to celebrate.
Followed up by a correction: there would be free pizza for management.

/u/Edril

The fact that the person who sent out that correction didn't stop himself for a second and think "Hmm, maybe this will be received poorly and we should just bite the bullet and buy pizza for everyone" is a pretty large failure in management.

"We want you to savour the flavour and fun -
It's simply a thank you for all that you've done!
A full-hearted thank you for all that you do!"

The next email started:

My dad is the 3rd person in his family to have his name, carried down generation after generation from my great grandfather.

When we were little, my granddad stopped by one day and passed onto my dad the family ring with their initials embroidered into it. It was emotional and he was very happy. Later that night my brothers and I lost a frisbee in a tree. My dad is the ultimate DIYer so he rigged up a football that he would throw into the higher branches and then yank on it with a rope he had attached to free the frisbee. It eventually worked and it was a funny little scene.

Later that night he realized his ring was gone — he assumed tossing the football again and again had loosened it up and it probably flew off his hand.

He would go around that tree constantly for years to come looking for that ring. He even bought a heavy duty metal detector to try and find it. No luck.

I would hope Santa would finally cut the guy a break and give that ring back.

#2790 – Surgeons who work with amputating limbs, what was your worst “ OH F***!” moment?

2019-11-28 17:42:40

/u/Piggy_Royale

/u/CrochetyNurse

The first surgery I saw as a nursing student was a toe removal. Poor patient had to have his big toe removed due to a diabetic ulcer that had gotten infected. I was so afraid of the thought of getting nauseous with my first surgery, I didn't eat breakfast that day.

The case started at noon - I was wrapped in the sterile gown and mask/hair cover/shoe covers. I was positioned by the circulating nurse in a spot with a great view but wouldn't get in the way. The case started and the doc started cauterizing bleeding veins/capillaries right off the bat. I learned that cauterizing flesh smells a lot like searing steak. My empty stomach and hungry brain didn't know the difference, and I could hear my stomach growling at the smell. I thought it would be just my embarrassment, until the surgeon and nurse both looked at me. They could hear it too!

I'm not sure what I said, but I was glad my mask hid how I was struggling not to cry. It was awkward until the doc took the severed toe and tossed it over the patient and into the formalin container. He had great aim.

Saw 'em grindin',

There she saw 'em

Takin' rollin'

Saw 'em slimy, saw 'em creepin',
Slither, skimmin',

There she saw 'em

Bits and bloody

Soft and warm and wet

There she saw 'em,

Speedin' out in fluids frightful.

/u/ClosedDimmadome

Me too. A lot of people in this thread apparently like it so much they don't care how annoying it is for the people around them.

Those people are called dicks.

/u/MaritereSquishy

About 10 years ago I was on the EuroStar coming back from Paris playing a tetris type game on my Nintendo DS, I normally left the sound on at home because I enjoyed the satisfying little clicks, but I always silenced it outside. That day I had been playing for over an hour, my earphones hooked to my mp3 player (loud enough to cover the train noise) and I assumed, my 3DS on mute, suddenly my earphone fell out and i realised i had left the game sound on, quite loud, I had annoyed everyone for over an hour. I still think about it. You know when you're about to fall asleep and your brain comes up with wrong things you've done and makes you cringe? Yup, mine (one of) is that. So maybe people are not being dicks, maybe they just didn't realise sound was on.

Years ago when I did a health sciences undergraduate degree, most of the cohort was determined to get into medical school. Our medical school program mainly accepted students from only our competitive undergraduate course, due to subject prerequisites. We all knew each other and were friendly, hanging out together and forming study groups.

Many of my friends were great - we shared tips, resources, practiced exams and interviews together. But there were a handful who really wanted to get into medical school, and since the program ranks applicants mainly based on undergraduate results, the better your friends perform, the lower your ranking is for selection.

So near application time, some of us would head off to the university library to borrow out textbooks to find chapters or page numbers that the lecturer mentioned would be on the exam.

And they would be ripped out. You'd go and find another library copy of the textbook, and that page would be ripped out too. All of them, totally removed in a hurry.

I didn't believe that someone from our cohort did it, until interview practice began. Students began obtaining copies of the questions from previous years and lying when others asked if they had it. I saw someone give a terrible, awful interview answer and the other student would give them glowing feedback and inform them they should say that, word-for-word, during the interview. It was a shitshow and a lot of relationships fell apart, or were never the same again.

At a job interview probably five years ago, I was in the sitting area waiting on the interviewer. I had my purse on my lap. She surprised me by coming out really fast, hand extended, and I stood up quickly to shake her hand, forgetting my purse was in my lap. I dropped it and spilled the majority of the contents on the floor. I tried to lunge forward to grab it before it fell, lost my balance and started to fall face first towards the ground. I corrected myself, but ended up falling back down on my butt into my seat.

The woman looked at me like she couldn't even process what the fuck just happened and slowly lowered her hand. There was no handshake. I did not get the job.

This whole event transpired in probably less than 3 seconds, but it is permanently seared in my memory.

/u/HotSauceHigh

Who wants an uptight boss like that anyway?

/u/dr_franck

Yeah, I get that first impressions count. But who on earth would actually use one klutz-y but relatively minor moment to define a potential employee without even giving them the benefit of an interview? Yeeesh.

I stumbled and tripped - but I didn't fall down.
She stood and she stared from above with a frown.
She lowered her hand,
with a shake of her head.

The office was silent.

"... how dare you?" she said.

I take a long deep breath and shake my head. Putting your mind into these heart cringing moments can stress and worry you. Get out of it by reminding yourself it's done. Be in the present now.

... and still, in the calm of an evening in bed,
That singular moment replays in my head,
I think of the feeling I felt as a boy -
The looks on their faces, the sounds of their joy.

They laughed,
for they hadn't a reason to see -
They laughed,
for they couldn't imagine 'twas me -
They laughed,
with the freedom of comfort and pride -
They laughed while I curdled in darkness inside.

How well I remember the why, and the way -
The shock and the blame and the shame of the day.
I dream, and I hear it.
I still see it yet.

And then,
for a while,
I just smile and forget.

My mom is a massage therapist. She has worked at several chiropractic offices. Often times, if you're good enough and trustworthy enough, the chiropractors will give you the keys so you can see clients on the weekends

I once had to take an uber to her work when she was scheduled to massage this one guy. He was married and new to the US. He had been sending messages to my mom, which made her question his intent, but chalked it up to him not speaking a lot of English. I get a call from her telling me to Uber to her place of work as soon as possible. Apparently the guy had sent a message with this code phrase that in the massage world means things are going to become sexual. So I'm the first to arrive. My mom gets there and tries to downplay the situation to make herself feel better by saying things like "well, maybe he just didn't know what that meant. I could be drawing a conclusion that isn't true. He has a wife afterall."

Man comes in with candy and flowers. He sees me sitting in the chair really confused. Hands them to my mom. She massages him. He pays her. Gives me a side ways glance, and leaves.

I had a client start flirting with me while on my table, I reminded her that the session is purely medical and I'd like to keep the conversation about her and what she's dealing with. She stroked my leg once in a sexual manner and I threatened to end the session there if she tried something like that again... after that, the rest of her session was smooth.

I take stuff like that pretty seriously, I'm not setting our profession back 30 years because some people think someone touching them means anything sexual. I had a stroke a couple of weeks ago (only 27 and no health explanation for the event) and while I was in the hospital walking down the hall with my good old buddy Winston (what I named my IV drip machine pumping me with blood thinner) an older gentleman across the hall saw me and told his nurse I was far too young to be in the ICU. He had a little plastic pumpkin for Halloween and not much else so he asked the nurse to give it to me.

I never found out which patient gave me that pumpkin but since the stroke, whenever things get stressful I look at it (now sitting on my desk at work) and remember that everything is okay. I plan on keeping my little plastic stroke pumpkin for the rest of my life however long or short it may be.

&#x200B;

Edit: Never thought I would have to be *that* girl but this got way more attention than I had ever expected. I am going to be driving home soon from work and I am still working on replying to all of the comments here. I just wanted to thank all of you for taking the time to show a little support, it really does mean something to me and it is oddly comforting having so many absolute strangers take a moment to relate / offer encouragement. And of course... for those who decided me and my stroke pumpkin were worthy of actual currency, thank you very much for the awards! /u/Notably_Average Thanks! I am doing well all things considered and I am grateful to have bounced back so quickly. The whole experience was really sort of surreal.

/u/-Pixie-

Do you mind sharing what the stroke felt like? Did you or the people around you recognize it as such or only in the hospital?

I have no qualms about sharing... still a bit mildly fascinated myself to be honest in regards to the whole ordeal. I was at work and it was a very typical Friday morning. I hadn't been sleeping much recently due to some neck/shoulder pain (previous small injury that didn't heal plus bad gaming posture habits) but it had actually started to let up so I was in pretty good spirits.

I work doing IT helpdesk so I was at my desk and on a call with a user when my vision started to get kind of fuzzed out on the right side. I tried rubbing my eye but realized that both eyes were fuzzing in the same spot and the spot was growing. I finished the call while joking with the user about me not being able to see what I was typing but I was starting to get a bit concerned.

I joked to my coworker that I needed a break because I was having a stroke or something (lol) and then tried to look down at my hands on my keyboard and realized no matter how hard I tried, I could only see one of them and the other was just not there.

I felt alright still but a little panicky which I attributed to the vision loss and tried to take a sip of coffee. I was looking at my coffee on the desk and grabbed a cup and brought it to my mouth thinking it was the coffee... it was not. I was confused at this point but not really able to comprehend it. I went to the restroom and sat in an empty stall for about 15 minutes until my vision came back but as I walked back to my desk I started getting a little nauseous and shaky so I decided to go to my boss's office and ask for a break. I remember I was sort of holding myself and words weren't coming to me easily which he definitely picked up on and asked me to sit in his office while he grabbed HR.

I called my mom while he was out of the office (after opening and closing my contacts several times and forgetting what I was doing - thankfully she works close by) and asked her to pick me up because I might be heading for a migraine. Note I had never had a migraine but the symptoms are eerily similar and I knew this from friends who did.

When she picked me up we almost drove home but I was getting very nauseous and wasn't really verbal so we stopped at the hospital by my house. They 100% figured it was a migraine just as I did and gave me a migraine cocktail but not before doing a CT with dye just to rule out anything else (thankfully)

One of the attendants came in telling me I was about to be discharged and he was grabbing my paperwork when another came in and asked if my shoulder was hurting. He then said I was being admitted and would be taken to the ICU and be there for a least a couple days because I had presented with a stroke event. (Mind you I was starting to feel better at this point).

I probably left some things out but feel free to ask questions if you have any, I really don't mind discussing it. Helps me process it too.

When I'm feeling down and out -
Full of sorrow,

Full of cold and cast afar -
When I'm troubled,
there you are.

When I'm drifting far away -
All my skies are cold and grey -
All the world's a fading star -
When I'm falling,
there you are.

When I'm dreaming,

When days are hard, and nights are long;
When storms are raging rough -
When all my dreams are non-too-strong,
And hopes ain't hope enough -

I close my eyes to hear the breeze;
The secret words inside -
The whispered winds that shake the trees;
The songs that skip and hide.

I hear the rhymes that ride the tide,
The swing, the sound, the beat -
The lines that swell and slip and slide
In stanzas,
small and sweet.

I hear the sounds that hold and wait
For those who seek to find -
A safer shore; a surer state;
A better frame of mind.

When days are hard;
when tempests cry
A squall of aches and pains -
I close my eyes,
and breathe a sigh.

And poetry remains.

Try to stab someone? You trip and fall on the knife instead.

When Little Timmy made a plan

/u/sio rez

There's a technique out there from the military. Basically if you don't move and don't think for a minute or so you'll sleep unless you have a medical issue. Works great for me

/u/DrWhiteApe

There's more to it than that, and the military technique requires some practice to master. AsapScience made a good video explaining and teaching this. Including a simplified method but also how to practice it thoroughly. It works very well in my experience.

Edit 2: Lowering temperature helps you sleep and improves sleep quality.

Examples of lowering temperature is: Using an A/C, a fan, or simply sleeping with less clothing. OBS: Don't let a fan or anything similar blow directly on your skin, it can lead to muscle soreness/pain.

Edit 1: Since so many commented that "sleep in 2 min but 7 min video":

The first 2 or so minutes of the video explains the technique simply for people looking to sleep quick. It works half as a placebo and half as a genuine method. Because later in the video, they explain the method in detail, how to practice it and some history/uses behind it.

Edit 3: I never really do this but I just want to say that this is now my top comment. Cheers.

Collecting skills. I know how to weld,do plumbing, carpentry, any kind of construction work, cooking, baking, machine sewing, gardening fixing a car. People seem to underestimate the value of these kind of things.

If it's plumbin' or construction -
If it's learnin' how to code -
If it's bakin'-cake-production,
And you serve it a la mode -

If it's cookin',
if it's sewin' -
If it's playin' the guitar -
If it's plant-and-flower-growin',
Or it's fixin' up a car -

If it's carpentry or craftin' -
If it's kneadin' pizza dough -
If it's rapid-water-raftin'
Down a river in the flow -

If it's etchin',
if it's fletchin' -
If it's tendin' to a yard -
If it's startin'-arty-sketchin',
Makin' paintin's avant garde -

If it's any skill discernin' -
If it's any task or test -
If it's any chance for learnin' -

... well I'll do my very best.

With all that extra time I had,
With all that extra time ...

I'd buy myself a writing pad,
And write a pantomime -
I'd take a walk around the park
To watch the birds in flight -
I'd sit and stare, and after dark,
I'd view the stars at night -
I'd learn to craft a boat or two
To sail across the sea -
I'd find the perfect thing to do
With me, and only me -
I'd paint myself a silver scene
Of homes and hills and lakes -
I'd make a glossy magazine
For baking tasty cakes -
I'd take a swim beyond the shore
And through the foam and spray -
The world would be my open door
With just an extra day.

With all that extra time to spend,
To spare, to share, to know -
I'd live my dreams...

... but in the end,
I'd only waste it though.

I worked for an aviation company that (among other things) did charter flights. I had an NDA that I would not reveal who was traveling with us and where they were going. This was for client privacy, as some people are wealthy/famous enough that they're targets for paparazzi, or even espionage/kidnapping/extortion etc.

So now that it's expired, I can tell you that a minor country music star flew with us when his regular jet broke down, that the CEO of the local food processing plant goes to his Florida house about twice a month, and that's about it. Nothing exciting.

I'm upvoting this simply because most NDAs are not some super hush hush thing. Most of them are pretty boring.

You barely know them but suddenly you are their best friend. Everyone else is just AWFUL. You are so special and awesome. Especially at listening to their (many) problems. Because you are so empathetic and smart and insightful....Dont run. Sprint.

/u/UserAwayThrow

Yup, I hate that. To add to this, they expect you to start spending all of your free time with them and get mad at you if you don't. It's like they want to make themselves an important part of your life but the relationship isn't strong enough to warrant that level of interaction.

/u/WhiskeyxWhiskers

Ugh yes. I was really close with this woman I worked with. She was a bit older than me (17 years older) but she was always down for a good time. I started dating my now husband, who also worked with us, and she pitched a fit because she ate lunch by herself for a few days and said I wasn't being attentive enough to her. Also said I'm just "that girl who gets a boyfriend and neglects everything else". Such a slap in the face considering I broke plans with him several times to do shit for her, such as picking up her step daughter an hour away at 1am when she got back from a school trip, and an emergency phone call at 11pm when her son got violent with her wife's kid.

Anytime she needed anything, I was there. I did more for her than I would do for most people. And I'm an asshole because I went out to lunch with my boyfriend a few times. Get fucked. I clearly made the right decision considering I'm married to the man now.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 1  × 1

And though I'm engrossed
by the things that you say -
I just have to go...

... cause I don't want to stay."

#2744 – You must die in next 48 hours. If you get a Darwin award, you will be reincarnated. How will you die?

2019-11-09 16:08:06

/u/nicvampire

Almost Darwined myself yesterday. Embarrassing story, but here goes: I work out in my garage everyday. I also park my car in the garage; so when it's time for my workout I simply back my car down into my driveway. I have an older car so I don't like turning the engine over for such a short duration to back up the car 15 feet so I just turn the car on, put it in neutral, and push it out of the garage and let gravity do the rest when it hits the downslope of the driveway. Yesterday I decided to perform this action in socks, this was of course my "Darwin moment". While standing half in my driver's side door and half on the slick concrete of the garage, I slipped and fell on my side just as the car hit the downward slope of the driveway. My initial panic moment was to try to stop the car by pushing the front tire with my foot, which did nothing but propel my toes under the tire. I was able to pull my foot from underneath the tire but in doing so slipped again, and fell even further under the car. At what seemed to be my certain 'final destination' moment of being run over by my own fucking car, I was able to sit up and reach up into the car and hit the break pedal with my hand. So there it is, being run over by my own shitty car

This comment certainly got more attention than I expected. Thank you for the silver.

To add a bit - the next few hours were spent thinking how stupid and lucky I was. If anyone has ever used the BRAKE pedal (sorry for the misspell) while the engine is off, you know that you have about one good push on it before you bleed the hydraulic fluid from the lines therefore disabling the power brakes. If you've ever tried to use brakes that were not power brakes, you realize it takes a little gumption. Don't know if I would've had the arm strength to engage the brake pedal at such an awkward angle. It would not have taken much to have screwed up my 1 attempt at engaging the brakes. Yes a myriad of mistakes were made, I am a total idiot and probably do not need to pass my genes on for the betterment of humanity; but maybe there is a fellow dipshit out there just about to make a similar mistake that can learn a little sumpin' from this. Thanks again

Trying to lick a passing train

When Little Timmy took a ride
To see the open sea -
"How nice it is to spy the tide,"
He said with pride and glee.

He rode the train from shore to shore,
And all along the track -
He watched the changing scenes and swore:

But journeys end, and all too quick,

And so, he gave the train a lick.

And Timmy fucking died.

Resonate around the nation -
Small contentions oft repeated
Make for altercations heated.

Let us talk of all religions -
Add a dash or half a smidgen's
Pinch of doctrine hard to swallow -
Watch the chaos shortly follow.

Let us talk of state and power -
Add a drop of Donald's tower,
Daily news and contradiction -
Settle back and watch the friction.

Soon you'll find you're off debating,
Ranting, raving, raging, hating,
Blaming, shaming one another.

... let us talk of walls, my brother.

/u/CapableLetterhead

My 3 year old was being potty trained at the time and I took him to Mcdonalds after his vaccinations to cheer him up. He had a great time until he announced to me that he wet himself. So I go to my bag to get a change of trousers and pants to hear people laughing and I look up from my bag. He dropped his trousers and pants to the floor and was shuffling to the bathroom door with them around his ankles with a big grin on his face. Just his little butt exposed. His words, they were simple, but honest and true -

His reasons were noble -
His meaning was clear -
Emotion that leaked from his eye in a tear.

And when he was finished, he stopped with a sigh -
With triumph, he wiped at that tear in his eye.
And then, he decided, before he'd submit,
He'd read what he'd written.

He said: "... this is shit."

#2731 – What would 12 yr old you think of how you are now?

2019-11-01 15:35:00

/u/jcat47

/u/Trigger93

12 year old me had no friends, was bullied, and hated everything in his life. He had fears of getting fat, dying alone, and spending his days hidden from the world.

He would cry at how well we've wound up. Married, working as an Engineer, with a home, a baby on the way, shitloads of close friends whom I love and would do anything for, and the kids who used to bully me wound up exactly where they belonged.

“Who’s that awesome dude right there?
Awesome dude and few compare?
Awesome dude with kids and wife?
Awesome job
and awesome life?

“Who’s that awesome dude above?
Awesome dude with luck in love?
Awesome dude with things to do?
Awesome friends and future too?

“Who’s that awesome dude ahead?
Awesome dude and life he’s led?
Who’s that awesome dude I see?
Who’s that awesome-oh...

... it’s me.”

Struggled with eating disorders in high school. Senior year my dad passed away and I spiraled. Had a meltdown in the middle of my English class. Teacher pulled me out into the hallway, gave me a hug and said “are you eating?” Idk why but it snapped me out of it and that is the first time I realized people noticed or cared. She probably doesn’t know this but I’m sure she saved my life.

Edit: didn’t expect so many replies! Looks like I need to get to writing!!

/u/Aestus74

| She probably doesn’t know this...

If you are able to, try to make sure she does. Teaching is a terribly thankless job, where even when you are performing at your peak, someone is yelling at you about how horrible you are. Students, parents, admin, other teachers, etc.

A moment, even years later, of learning that you did make a positive impact is the best thing a teacher can ask for. Well, next to better pay and job prospects :P.

/u/Shitiforgotsomething

I’ve thought about Writing to her but never really found the words. just found out she’s still working at the school. I should stop putting it off.

My primary school principal. Right before my teen years I started acting out due to family/home problems. No matter how many times I acted out, he treated me with absolute kindness, always above and beyond. I can't remember what I did to get sent to his office, but I'll never forget what he told me: "The best man you can be is a gentleman".

He encouraged my love for writing and drawing, helped me submit a story and was there when I won second place. When I failed maths, he tutored me in his office after school. When I showed interest in music, he let me practise on his guitar. I am forever in his debt for making me the person I am.

When Little Timmy went to bed,
A knock came from his door:

“Can I come in?” his father said,
And crossed the bedroom floor.

“What is it, pa?” said Little Tim,
Alarmed, afraid to know -
His father’s face was lined and grim,
And set with grief and woe.

“I’m sorry, son,” he heard him say.
He hung his head and sighed.
“It’s just... I have a debt to pay.”

And Timmy fucking died.

She'd grabbed her things and travelled on.

I stopped inside the bathroom where
I found no toothbrush waiting there -
No bottles big.
No tweezers small.

And took the lid from off my pen

/u/lanismycousin

My friend was an aspiring actor and made a career of mostly playing scumbags for two decades.

He's a big bald white dude with a beard, so if you needed a big scary dude he was your guy. Had a handful of small speaking roles but most of his parts were things like "outlaw biker #2", "bodyguard #1", "skinhead guard", "scary jailhouse rapist" etc. Plus plenty of extra and background parts. He's been in a bunch of movies, commercials, and TV shows, some credited and some not credited. Also gotten killed on screen a few times.

One of the nicest dudes I know, so him playing so many scumbags is hilarious to us. Especially hilarious since he's a teacher now.

If you're trying to destroy a body, a strong base will be much more successful than a strong acid.

Acids are difficult to legally acquire due to them being ingredients in explosives.

Caustic soda is much more useful and accessible, as it's an ingredient in soaps.

Once it's done you'll have a liquid that you can then place in barrels and bury somewhere.

Even the bones will be broken down to an extremely brittle calcium deposit, which you can easily crush and filter off.

You can then dispose of the liquid as you wish. It makes great fertiliser!

Alternatively, use pigs.

They eat anything and will leave no traces!

And once again, pig shit is great fertiliser!

Edit: Christ, what a way to reach 100k karma...

Alternatively, use pigs.

When Little Timmy bought a pig,
He said: "I'll tell you true -
You're such a pretty piggy big,
There's no one pink as you!

"You're sweet and neat and super-swell -
You're rare and fine and fair!
With little piggy ears as well,
And curly piggy hair!

"I'll have to buy another ten -
A heap of hogs!" he cried.

But Timmy fainted in the pen.

And Timmy fucking died.

Seriously, if you don't have that pitty-me backstory, you're not going far.

/u/DeathBySuplex

It's often comical when you get what would be an "okay talent" that gets Golden Buzzer'd through to the Live Show because of the sad backstory and then you see them on stage with the people who fought tooth and nail through the other rounds and gasp are far more talented and they just look so awful in comparison.

The teen girl who was a cancer survivor at a young age is who I often think of this, like she had a good voice for a high school student. She probably would have been a solid lead actress in her high school plays and maybe for the local theater group, but there's ZERO chance if she just walked out and said, "I'm from Everytown, USA and I'm a singer" and sang her song that she'd have even gotten past the primary audition.

Once that initial heartstring tugging moment fades off, these people often find themselves without the talent to back up the stage they are on.

“So you say that you’re a dancer -
But we only want to know -
Have you had a little cancer?
Have you faced a little woe?

“Did you lay to rest a mother?
Did you ‘fare thee well’ a wife?
Have you lost a bigger brother?
Have you lived a painful life?

“Did a battle leave you bloody,
Leave you broken on your knees?
Are you dancing for a buddy
With incurable disease?

“Are you fit to go the distance
If we dangle you a dream?
Can we peddle your existence?
Can you make it as a meme?

“Can you find a tale and tell it?
Can you keep it sweet and brief?
Can we pack it up and sell it?
Can we profit from your grief?

“It’s the moment for your glory!
It’s the perfect time to shine!
And we’d love to hear your story...

If it boosts a bottom line.”

My step mothers parents took this to a new level. He built a second house next door. They lived next to each other for 20 years before they both passed in a short amount of time.

It seemed very odd to me, but it worked for them. At least from an outside perspective. I know images never reflect reality.

/u/zerbey

Not exactly the same, but I had a Great Aunt and Uncle who had some kind of huge disagreement early in their marriage and never spoke to each other again even though they lived together. They slept in different rooms, and he spent most of his time at home in his garden. She took care of the house, cooked his meals, did his laundry, etc. etc.. He went to work and paid the bills. At family gatherings the men would hang out with the husband in one room and the women with the wife in another. They remained married that way the rest of their lives, when he died she was apparently utterly devastated.

#2715 – Ex convicts of Reddit, did you find prison rehabilitating? Why or why not? What would you change about the system if you could?

2019-10-25 22:17:09

/u/RamenIsMyKryptonite

/u/First-Fantasy

Did 2 years in 2002. 1 year in a for profit regional jail and 1 year minimum security state prison.

Not rehabilitating in the sense they made any effort to rehab us but I did go straight to stay out of there.

I was 18 and breaking into businesses for the thrill. Hardcore self destruction. Thought my life was over until I saw how worse the other convicts were. The only services jail offers are GED, church and AA/NA so any rehabbing is done there. The discipline isn't like the military where they attempt to teach you honor or anything. Its just stand for count and clean your area once a day.

I already had a GED but took it again out of boredom. Prison is a lot better. Counselors teach community college courses and you have a job. Came out with 9 credits.

Probation sucks. Get downtown twice a week, dont have a shy bladder, keep a job, go to meetings even though I didn't have a drug problem. High stress and a lot of us get indefinite probation which averages 5 years.

But I did good. I'm white and middle class so I was able to blend back into society easy. Waited tables and did community college. My PO let me off probation in two years so I could go to university and ultimately hardly missed a beat. Happily married now with three kids, a mortgage and a career I don't hate.

Honestly the biggest motivation for me was watching WB shows in jail and seeing them all go to college. It was like when Mogli saw other humans and left the jungle on his own. Needless to say I had an unstable childhood.

Thought my life was over until I saw how much worse
the other convicts were...

When I was young,
and full of doubt,
and too afraid to see -
It took a while to figure out that life was up to me.

When I was young,
and made mistakes
with all the 'friends' I kept -
I thought I couldn't push the brakes, or change the path I stepped.

And when it seemed that life was through,
I learned to know -
it's not.
In time you learn to see what's true.

Perspective helps.

A lot.

EDIT: okay this is crazy. So I actually meant "=/=". But I wrote the other slash and I guess it disappeared, unbeknownst to me, completely reversing the point I was trying to make. I was trying to tell OP that I didn't think immortal meant invincible on this question.

But lo and behold, me messing up and making the OPPOSITE point of what I was TRYING to make is now my most liked comment by a VERY wide margin... Figures lol.

And no I'm not changing it. It's clearly meant to be. It's like a bug that becomes a feature.

/u/deathto cps

The definition of immortal is living forever; never dying or decaying.

EDIT guys regardless of what definition you heard there is a official definition by the dictionary

You can suffer and become disabled technically you will remain that way forever according to the definition

/u/Siarles

There's a lot of nuance involved in the terminology of immortality. On its own, "immortal" only means "not dying"; bad things can still happen to you that you might not want to live through but will anyway. If you want to also never get injured you need to be invulnerable. If you don't want to age, you want to be ageless.

Agelessness is usually a package deal with immortality, but every now and then you get that one genie who's a complete A-hole. Agelessness without immortality means you can still be killed, you just won't die of old age. Invulnerability without immortality means you can't be killed, but you'll still die of old age. Agelessness and invulnerability is probably functionally the same as immortality, but there might still be some outside chance that you can still die somehow; it depends on what magic or whatever made you like this in the first place.

Pick their nose

A tissue's fine
(if you've the time, and option, I suppose) -
But as for mine,
a hand's sublime
to root around the nose!

To scoop the beak - to loop and seek the gunk, the goop within -
A fist's the place,
or so to speak,
the space to best begin!

For chips,
for strips
and booger bits,
a finger's where they end.

The nostril's where the finger sits.

It fits.

So why pretend?

/u/blehmeng

/u/JobbyJaber

I get myself out of a bad mood by overthinking and get myself in a sad mood :)

At first I was angry - at first I was vexed - enraged and indignant, offended, perplexed -
At first I was fuming, ill-tempered and terse - but then I considered...

... and now it's much worse.

#2708 – How do you get yourself out of a bad mood?

2019-10-24 20:54:34

/u/blehmeng

/u/RamsesThePigeon

This will seem like a too-long comment for such a simple piece of advice, but I think it might help.

See, at their core, bad moods usually come about in response to feeling afraid of something.

You've likely heard that ignorance begets bliss, but that's actually an inaccurate statement. In fact, ignorance begets fear, and it's only when we've learned something – like the fact that the toilet isn't actually going to suck us down when we flush it – that we're able to smile. This transition from apprehension to elation gets more complicated as we age, but it isn't because we know more; it's because we realize how much there is to know.

Imagine being told that you needed to read a paragraph in order to pass a class. To a four-year-old, that might seem like an incredibly daunting challenge... but to a college student, it would be the easiest assignment in history. However, if that same college student was suddenly told that they needed to peruse and retain the contents of an entire library, they would be back to feeling the dread and despair that their younger counterpart had experienced. They might even start considering how the judicious introduction of a match could be more appealing than the prospect of undertaking the task in front of them.

Here's the thing, though: Lowering one's standards never actually helps with anything, because we're still aware of what we've done. Sure, the aforementioned library might have been reduced to ashes, but all we're really left with is a sense of guilt. It isn't just guilt about having burnt a few books, either; it's guilt about having shied away from a challenge. Only by offering our very best (at all times) can we start to feel satisfied, because it's then that we can honestly claim to have made a genuine effort. Put another way, it might be a little bit thrilling to offer a single-sentence answer to an /r/AskReddit question and see those votes tally up, but it will ultimately make your mood worse in the end. You haven't created or contributed anything which deserves that electronic applause, so you're back to looking for the next easy hit; you're back to emotions of emptiness, sadness, and boredom.

You might also feel like the complexity of life keeps you from achieving happiness. After all, there's so much wrong in the world today, and the vast majority of it is beyond your control. Even smaller, personal details like having a terrible job or obnoxious coworkers can cast a seemingly permanent shadow over your life ... and since that same judicious introduction of a match isn't exactly an option there, you're left downtrodden and depressed. In those cases, though, you still have the choice about how to handle your circumstances: No matter how bleak or hopeless a situation might appear, the fact that you're still alive means that you can turn it to your advantage.

When faced with a world gone mad, sometimes it's best to sit back and laugh like you're the only one who gets the joke. At first glance, that might seem insane or insensitive, but once you've found a glimmer of good cheer, it's that much easier to view things as they are as opposed to how they “should be” or “shouldn’t be.” From there, you can almost always find (or create) a route onward and upward, and you’ll soon discover that a productive path brings positive emotions by default. There will be obstacles, but when you assume that they can be overcome (and when you approach them with a slightly off-putting smile), you’ll often find that they’re more eager to get out of your way.

When in doubt, remember: Humor is just horror with a punchline.

TL;DR: In order to be cheer yourself up, challenge yourself... then laugh at the toilet.

[/u/Poem\_for\_your\_sprog \[Link\]](#)

... there will be obstacles, but when you assume that they can be overcome (and when you approach them with a slightly off-putting smile), you’ll often find that they’re more eager to get out of your way.

If maybe you’re weary of feeling alone -
Dejected and jaded with days on your own -
There’s really, sincerely just one thing to do:
A choice to be taking,
and making
for you.

Of course you will worry and fret for yourself -
But life isn’t meant to be lived from a shelf!
You have to be tough,
and you must see it through.

Go laugh at the toilet.

It’s all you can do.

/u/ARTX11

/u/deedah17

I have a big scar down the center of my chest, and 2 little “star scars” right under it.

I had just turned 3 and I was at my grandparents’ house with my family. My older cousin was spinning me around in a swivel chair. I fell off of the chair and landed on my side, on top of my grandmother’s knitting stuff that was sitting in a basket by the chair. A knitting needle went through my side and pierced my heart. My aunt thought the needle was just caught in my shirt, and ripped it out of me. I went unconscious almost immediately. By time I got to the hospital, I had lost a lot of blood and the doctors basically told my parents to prepare for the worst. Luckily, there was a badass heart surgeon there that performed emergency open heart surgery and saved my life! The star scars are from feeding tubes that were hooked up to me post surgery.

Very thankful!!

Edit: I have learned since posting this that my star scars are mostly likely from tubes for drainage. Thanks for the clarification!!

A blue baby blanket she made for her cat.

She looks at them all with a tear in her eye.
She puts them away with a sad little sigh.
She knows that it's over.
She knows that it's done.

She puts down her needle.

She picks up her gun.

He walks to the sink in a dream.

He sighs as he stares at his bottle of cream.

He presses the button -

and strangely enough -

There merely emerges a pale little puff.

It's early.

He looks at the sink with a frown.

His eyes wander up, and his eyes wander down.

And soon, for he knows he'll be needing to go -

He turns to the sad little lashings below.

And there,

in the bathroom,

he tries for a smile -

He flexes the palm of his hand for a while.

His insides are ready.

They rumble on cue.

It's early.

He knows what it is he must do.

About to start the process myself. 19 years married, together 21.

Now that the kids are older, self-sufficient, 2 of the 3 are driving, don't need their hands held for every little thing it will be a lot easier on them.

It's all I can do to get 5 minutes of her attention in a day. She has her head down in her kik chat app from the moment she gets up and back home and goes to bed. She's been meeting guys ("Just friends I swear") from Kik 'for lunch' and getting a lot of massages with her therapist at weird hours of the evening. Of course she's cheating although she swears she isn't. She turns her iphone location services off most of the time she is out.

6 months ago she started getting her lashes done, brows, tans, goes to the gym, walks for exercise, massages 3-4 times a month. She gets pissed when I text her asking what she's doing or when she will be home or if she will be home for dinner.

So, after all this time it's clear she doesn't want time or anything else from me, so might as well let her go do her thing.

/u/NekoCreations

GrandPad. Bought one for my tech illiterate mom in law for Christmas. Spent 3 days trying to set it up with tech support before admitting it was a piece of $200 crap.

Ended up returning it and customizing an older android tablet for her. Made it so she couldn't install or buy anything without a password, hid all the system controls so you can't find them without search, then hid search. Installed only the few apps she needed and hid and disabled the rest. Made it so I could remotely update and change things from my iPad. Installed a better keyboard for her eyes and we were good to go.

Her favorite apps are bingo and YouTube where she watches nature videos all day. She has a radio installed and an app for local news. :)

/u/felipe_the_dog

There's a whole market for that. Especially if you incorporate video calling. I've seen lots of tablets geared towards seniors but none of them seem to really nail the concept.

/u/ceojp

Old people don't like products aimed at old people because they make them feel old and incapable. Old people just want something they can use. It's a fine line, but it can make all the difference in the success of a product.

It's like how the Dodge Magnum was marketed as a vehicle for middle-aged dads who need some fun in their lives. That may have indeed been their target audience, but they were too blatant about it. Now whenever I see someone driving a Dodge Magnum, I just imagine the driver is a lame dad who never has any fun. Not the best image for a product.

Subaru got it right. They didn't specifically target lesbians, but the marketing they did resonated with a lot of lesbians nonetheless. The same should apply to things like tablets. Make one that old people would want to use, but don't market it as a tablet for old people.

edit: apparently Subaru did target lesbians in their marketing, but they weren't overt or blatant about it. It was more of a dog-whistle.

/u/bionicragdoll

The Subaru one was deliberate as well. Their research showed that lesbians were the ones most likely to buy Subarus so they catered their ads to that audience but had to be subtle about it because being gay wasn't socially acceptable when they started the campaign.

A trim or a quim or a muff or a dam -
A gash or a slash or a cockpit and clam.

There's many vaginas -
and some of them small.
And some of them massive - but maybe not all.
And no one's is better -
and no one's to blame.

There's many vaginas.

They're not all the same.

#2691 – Japanese people of reddit, how do you know what your genitalia looks like if it's always blurred?

2019-10-10 20:14:04

/u/YourHoorMother

[removed]

/u/-SandorClegane-

I can explain this one, Onii-chan.

Japanese genitalia actually vibrates at a very high frequency. It is not intentionally blurred out. The only way to capture it is with high speed cameras. Those are a bit too expensive for adult film production, so you rarely get to see them clearly.

EDIT: TFTGKS + Additional Clarification Based on Numerous Responses:

The intensity of the vibration varies from person to person, but we do know it directly correlates to the genitalia's proximity to Mt. Fuji. The reasons for this are not fully understood.

Bottom line, when a Japanese porn star leaves Japan, their genitals no longer vibrate and can be recorded without distortion.

The idea of matching up users with similar interests and be friends was neat. I think the owner was just overwhelmed and it didn’t work out.

/u/MiceLikeCheese

I wonder if a bot could do this? Go through subscribed and show you the top ten people who match your interests

/u/EarlyHemisphere

Shit, this might very well be possible. I'm seriously considering doing this as a side project

Edit: yeah I'm def gonna look at it tonight

Edit: Thought it might be useful to put up a Github. I can't do anything now and have to work out a couple things but I'd like to use this and add contributors later!

/u/MiceLikeCheese

I was also thinking the same thing! I am pretty sure there is a decent Reddit API library for Python, just need to do the research to find out if it's feasible!

/u/EarlyHemisphere

Just found it. The wrapper is called PRAW (I've used it before for bots) and you can get a list of subreddits a user's subscribed to if they log themselves in. I'm pretty sure something could be made that basically asks the user to authenticate and then it could read the list of subreddits subscribed to and match the user with people who have similar subscriptions that have done the same already! EDIT: still not sure if it's possible though, I need to look into it

I'm actually gonna look into this tonight after work!

Edit: as most of you are pointing out, the solution would be a little more complicated than what I suggested. I'm thinking of using some kind of weighting system based on my thoughts and also your guys' responses.

Edit: a couple possibilities include making a Reddit group chat to discuss the algorithm for matching consisting of people who responded to this with some input and making a GitHub and sharing it with you guys. If any of these happen I'll update this and/or pm you guys

They'd picked and they'd chosen, collected and massed - their footage of vandals
the four seasons passed.

They gathered with partners in uniforms blue - with donuts and coffee and sergeants to view - with handguns and handcuffs and hearts filled with joy - and new shiny badges for each girl and boy.

“Be silent, it's starting!”
said one with a smile -

they watched for a while.

For now,
it was Christmas.

When Little Timmy went to dine
Beside a friend or two -
He said: "perchance, it might be fine
To feast with carved bamboo!

"I like to take a wooden stick,
A pair," he spoke with ease -
"And point them both at food to pick
And grab and snag and squeeze!

"Oh what delight it is," he said,
"To grasp your grub between!
To clasp the feed that waits ahead,
The red, the white and green!"

He hooked a noodle, long and limp -
He raised his sticks with pride.

But Little Timmy ate a shrimp.

And Timmy fucking died.

#2680 – What is an unexplainable memory from your childhood?

/u/ItsZoeyyy3

/u/cardboardshrimp

I have this memory of sleeping in an office block in south London with my mum on an air bed. I recall looking out of the window and feeling sad.

Years later I was driving and got a very strong impulse to stop outside this building and I was 100% certain it was that one. Every time I went past it felt odd. My mum says it didn't happen, everyone else concurs. My best conclusion at this stage is that I probably had a very vivid dream that became conflated with something else.

/u/died_of_ennui_

Your mom left your dad for a night and assumed you'd forget?

/u/cardboardshrimp

Could be. It's certainly plausible.

/u/Razzle_Dazzle08

If you had a rough childhood I hope you're feeling better now and things are good. Stay strong!

/u/cardboardshrimp

Many thanks! It was a good childhood, which is why this is an especially strange one.

“I had a happy childhood, friend.
The summers never seemed to end.
My life was good,
my world was fine,
And all I’d ever need was mine.

“I woke up warm.
I went to school.
My days were good,
my friends were cool.
My hopes were big,
my woes were small,
My dreams were sweet and splendid, all.

“I had the will to find a way,
And that is why I have to say:
I had a happy childhood, bro.”

The other said:

” ... but did you though?”

This might be a cultural thing for Latinos, but there were some weird sexual comments said by female family members to my son when he was a toddler. They would call him “my boyfriend” and ask for kisses in a very aggressive way. When I changed his diapers, they’d stand around and say “De quién es ese pipí?” which roughly translates to “Whose dick is that?” which led me to always change his diaper in a private room, even when told that “You can do it here, it’s ok. We’re all family.”

One of my aunts even commented on how his dick has grown since he was a baby. Yeah, his whole body has grown! THERE’S NO NEED TO TALK ABOUT HIS PENIS SPECIFICALLY!! STEP AWAY FROM MY CHILD!

Well when it comes to relationships it’s easy to get into this and say yes. I have been single for a long time, and honestly as much as I want a relationship, at least with the women who are talking to me, the prospect of having to call someone everyday or to be expected to fit my life into their schedule is not something I look forward to. It’s more the loss of independence than a desire for solitude IMO.

And near the rows of empty seats -
The unused plates, the untouched meats -
The brim-filled bowls of purple punch -
The snacks, the chips and dip for lunch -
The perfect pies, the puddings sweet -
The plain and unfilled sign-in sheet -
The spotless cups and saucers small -
A sign says:

"Welcome Hermits, All!"

Accurate. When you distance yourself from the drama, cacophony, and bigoted people around you, the world is quieter.

But people skills do need to be maintained, and friends are a good thing to have. It’s a balance.

/u/nighthawk580

This resonates with me. I used to work in an industry where work was extremely intense, frantic, busy and long hours, working 7 days a week for 6-7 weeks at a time.

I would get to the end of a block and need to pack the car and head to the mountains with my fishing rods with the hope of not seeing another person for 4 days or more. It was refreshing and a good chance to reset for return to 'normal' life.

I then took it a step further when I left that job and headed to Tasmania (I live in Melbourne, aus) and do the same. I spent 5 months basically camping solo and fishing most days, often in complete wilderness, gradually examining my own psyche and personal tenets. It was a hugely positive experience for me because after I got to know myself so well I realised that I had neglected my family and friends and my ability to interact had got rusty.

I returned to my home city and reconnected with those that are important to me, while those that weren't have not generally come back into my life. I was more focused on relationships and what is important, and actively nourished them and I am far better off now than before because I know that I LOVE solitude, but I also need people.

/u/CherreBell

Solo camping for almost half a year sounds amazing. Thanks for sharing.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]

When the world is all excited,
And I think I need some space -
Then I leave it there delighted,
And I make my perfect place.

If I'm feeling filled with chatter,
And I've words I haven't said -
Then I'll have a little natter
With the people in my head.

For it's just a moment only,
And I'm certain you can see -

I am never truly lonely
When I'm on my own with me.

#2666 – Megathread: Reports Indicate House Speaker Pelosi To Announce Formal Impeachment Inquiry Of President Trump

/u/PoliticsModeratorBot

The announcement later Tuesday from Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) comes amid reports that President Trump may have pressured a foreign leader to investigate former vice president and potential 2020 campaign rival Joe Biden and his family.

A growing number of House Democrats are backing an impeachment inquiry as momentum shifts in the Democratic caucus.

This is still a developing story with a press conference on the horizon at 5 p.m. ET and this thread will be updated if/when the scope of the story is more focused

/u/CounterStreet

Obligatory not me, but my godfather/dad's life long best friend.

He was born with hearing but lost it before age 2 due to some health issues. Went his entire childhood deaf and in his 20s finally got a hearing aid. At the time, he and his wife were living in the downtown of a large city.

Apparently he had it about 2 weeks before he threw it out, saying everything was too loud, he hated the noise and sound, that things were more peaceful without it.

15 years later, he moved out into the country on a few hundred acres of woods. Still, he refused to wear a hearing aid, and kept refusing for the next 10 years. Finally, his wife convinced him to give it a try, and his mind was blown. He couldn't believe how QUIET everything was and how much he enjoyed hearing.

He finally explained that he thought the noise of the traffic downtown was the wind and that it sounded like that everywhere, all the time. So, for 25+ years, he thought wind sounded like the hundreds of cars driving by.

When I was 11, it was my first day at a new school and all the other students were also new. The Maths teacher started our first class by asking each of us about our education background (what school we came from, what they taught in our last year's Maths class etc.), just trying to get a general idea of what kind of students he was dealing with.

Thing is, I was so nervous that I spaced out for a bit and got lost in my overthinking mind, so I didn't hear the teacher's questions to my classmates. When it got to my turn, the teacher just said "Now tell me about you", assuming I understood what kind of information he was expecting. I just went straight into a monologue that started with "So I was born in the South Zone of the city, but my mom decided to move to our current neighborhood a few months after divorcing my dad..." And went on and on giving some very specific details about my short life. Everyone had a really confused look on their faces and as soon as I realized the teacher was also completely lost I stopped talking and went instantly red.

The teacher then said "that's all really great, but I was only interested in what happened last year, not the last 10...", and everyone started laughing.

Next day nobody remembered it anymore, but 12 years later it still comes to mind in pretty random moments.

Edit: a typo.

/u/MayorScotch

I think that is the key takeaway from these stories. No one remembers them but you.

I accidentally mixed up an inside joke with the wrong friend group with disastrous results.

Friend group #1: The “joke” was when someone calls and asks who’s all there we would add Darrell to the list of names. Darrell wasn’t a real person. The joke wasn’t really funny, and made no sense out of context, but I guess that’s why it was an inside joke.

Friend group #2: I was hanging out playing some drinking games with a bunch of people that I hadn’t hung out with in a while. It was a kind of get together to remember a friend that they had who had recently died in a car accident. I didn’t know him that well, but I was always down to party. Anyway the phone rings, and the person who answered started listing off names. Sorting my cards for another round of Presidents and Assholes I offhandedly said “heh and Darrell!”.

It was the typical record scratch moment where everyone stopped and looked at me. Darrell was the name of the friend who had just died.

This happened in 2002 and I still think about it all the time.

/u/Wizzdom

Darrell was there in spirit and appreciated that you, at least, remembered he was there.

I live by “You can joke about everything”, but let’s be honest, for some topics you need a REALLY good joke. The “Oh no, he didn’t!” approach is only funny a few times.

There is a reason why we still hold for example George Carlin or early Mel Brooks in high regard. Not because they were offensive, but because there was a clever message embedded in the F-bombs and Holocaust jokes. As soon as you are just being an asshole, you aren’t funny anymore.

Also there is a difference between Eric Cartman making anti-semitic remarks within the context of a South Park episode, where he is clearly positioned as the dumb asshole who deserves everything bad that’s gonna happen to him, and the guy who just yells “Sieg Heil! Oh, are you offended? *chink eye* I’m vely vely solly!”

/u/CockDaddyKaren

Going off your last paragraph, context is REALLY FUCKING IMPORTANT. Know your audience. There’s plenty of great dark Holocaust jokes but you ain’t gonna tell them to your Grandma that survived it. There’s some funny dead baby jokes but you probably won’t wanna tell them to someone who just had a miscarriage. And going off a reddit I saw a few days ago- there are lots of 9/11 jokes that are definitely funny, but you may not get the reaction you want if you tell them to Americans. Simply put, don’t be an insensitive fuckwad.

Simply put, don't be an insensitive fuckwad.

Be rude and unpleasant and soon you will find -
That nobody cares when you're speaking your mind.
Your 'jokes' will be many -
your friends will be few -
And no one will worry what happens to you.

Be cruel and insensitive, soon you will see -
That being a dickhead is all you can be.
They won't want you with them,
and then, when you're gone -
They won't really miss you.

They'll simply move on.

For our second date I had invited her out with myself and some friends to celebrate a friend getting a job. I drank. Heavily. She was my DD. She drove me home and as she pulled up to the curb I threw open the door, rolled out of the car, and vomited into the gutter. She then offered to help me cross the street, to which I responded by yelling "I'M DISGUSTING" and sprinting across the street. Once inside, I brushed my teeth aggressively. She asked what I was doing and I told her I needed to clean my mouth so I could kiss her. After I was done, I walked to my room, laid down, and immediately fell asleep. She spent the night to make sure I was okay.

I'm now holding our baby girl who was born just last week. I asked her at one point why she stayed with me through that and she said it was because even though I was piss drunk, the whole time I was still gentle and kind, asked her if she was having fun, and introduced her to everyone I knew. I'm a lucky guy.

EDIT: TIL that brushing your teeth after vomiting is bad.

/u/theredpanda__

“I love you,” he whispers and pukes on my scarf.

“You’re so very lovely, you’re lovely,” he weeps.

“I love you, you’re lovely, don’t look at me!”

We had come back from class, her dorm was right next to the school so we walked over. Started as studying and then turned into kissing.

Once we were horizontal, I felt a shift in my guts. I took a chance; most of my gas that day had been dry and silent so it felt safe. As soon as I let it go, I knew I was in trouble.

As I stood up and she repulsively sniffed the air. She asked if I let one rip. I simply said I shit myself and needed a ride home. We went to the movies as planned afterwards.

Pretty sure that's when I fell in love.

Many years ago, my cousin was a doctor at a teaching-hospital in my city. He came back from work one day and told us (he was staying with us at the time) that some guy had tried to use a lawnmower to trim his hedges.

The blades of the mower got snagged around some of the branches on the hedge, and this idiot didn't turn the motor off before trying to reach into the mower to remove the jamming branches.

As a result, when the branches were shifted, they dislodged, and the blades started spinning again at top speed, slicing his fingers off before he could remove them.

Potential Darwin award material right there.

EDIT - Was not expecting 6,000 upvotes!! :o

/u/puheenix

Similar story here, coming from a family member who does reconstructive surgery. Two men who were neighbors decided to trim the hedge between their houses using a riding lawnmower. They attempted to pick it up between them by gripping the blade housing. They each sliced off every finger but their thumbs. This surgeon was one of the ones tasked with sorting out which finger belonged in which position of which hand on which person, and reattaching each one with the proper nerve endings to restore function. Absolutely mind boggling how much intelligence was required to correct for their immense stupidity.

Fuuuuck that. You want me to ticket some dad's car because he moved it out of the driveway so his five year old son could bike around the driveway? Yeah, shits not happening.

Also, certain traffic violations in the middle of the night. You forgot to signal your merge when you're the only vehicle on a two lane road at 3 am? God help us all.

Recently expired DLs and plates. A neighboring city wrote a car who's plates expired 11 minutes prior. <que bewildered Jacksonville Jaguars fan gif>. One time, I saw an indigent defendant who was in custody tell the judge his public defender wasn't working hard enough and he wanted the judge to appoint different counsel. The judge asked him what specifically was the problem and he said "I don't want a female lawyer. I need a man who can take charge and fight for me" or something very similar to that. The judge (also female) said that's not how it works, then he starting yelling and getting into specifics about his public defender, just mainly I don't like her, she won't visit me, etc. The judge is annoyed and looks at him and is like fine, I'll appoint another attorney for you, but because you are not satisfied with your attorney and I need time to appoint you new counsel I am not going to hear any other issues today and will reset your case.

A few days later the judge sends defendant notice of his new appointed attorney, who happens to also be female, and notice of the case reset for six weeks. The case was originally set for a bond hearing and the DA and his PD had agreed to release him on an unsecured bond meaning he would have gotten out that day, if he hadn't thrown his temper tantrum. Instead he waited another six weeks in jail just to have another female attorney represent.

/u/freecain

Makes me think of sneaky pete, where the guy gets himself thrown in jail by attempting to hold up a gun store to avoid being killed. Maybe the defendant wanted to be in jail.

/u/vayaconburgers

I don't think that was the case, but I worked as a public defender for six years, and definitely had a handful of clients that were a-ok with being in jail. The streets aren't easy and I worked in a mountain town so the winters could be worse. The saddest case I can think of like that is a client who spent 18 months in before his case was dismissed. He got out with no family, no money, he lost essentially everything he had while in jail. He had lost sixty pounds while incarcerated. He was in his early sixties and died from hypothermia a few months after his release sleeping in an alley. He weighed 90 pounds when he died and had five dollars in his pocket.

/u/edgar_allan_bro

If I were homeless I'd 100% want to be in jail during the winter. 3 hots and a cot, as they say

/u/fakedaisies

My mom was a sheriff's deputy and worked for years in the county jail. She talked often of the homeless people who committed petty crimes specifically so they could be in jail and have a roof and meals. She had a lot of empathy for them - they were chronically homeless, and many of them were physically and/or mentally ill. County jail was preferable to trying to scrape by on the street, especially for the older guys.

/u/fdar

Seems like providing better services for the homeless would be a clear win... Housing/feeding people in a homeless shelter has to be both cheaper and better for them than having to go through the justice system and incarcerating them.

/u/SPOOFE

I worked at a liquor store for a few years, and one of the local regular homeless guys was gone for like a month and a half, in jail on something about vandalism (he used to break open like electrical boxes to hack power for his keyboard). Normally this guy was really, really out there, just a raving hyperactive mess. But when he came back from jail, apparently they were giving him medication... and this dude was sharp. Still really eccentric, but he could easily stay in an extended conversation, stay lucid, actually really really pleasant to talk with.

Over the next few days he went back to his old stark-raving self, and it was super sad to realize that all this dude needed was meds and a decent support structure and he'd be alright.

And how he was fine,

Prosecutor here. I showed up for a bond hearing one morning and the defendant asked the judge if he could say something. The first words out of his mouth were:

“Heyo Judge, look, like, the reason I hit her was because she disrespect me.”
He did not prevail.

/u/jseego

I once went to traffic court for various tickets / insurance / tags etc. I was not a responsible automobile owner back then.

Anyway, on the advice of a friend, I hired an atty who specialized in traffic court. Best decision.

I get called up in front of the judge, and I want to tell him some extenuating information, so I start on my story and the judge just interrupts me and goes, “Hold on. Did you hire this guy?” (points to my lawyer). “Yes your honor.” “Then please shut up and let him do his job.” The judge, my lawyer and the prosecutor all know each other on a first name basis (duh they all work in traffic court) and my lawyer gets me a good deal where I pay a minimal fine and have to reinstate my license and insurance by a certain date and they judge is like “thanks, next”.

/u/Organized_Rhinoceros

Ooooh yes. I can't tell you how many people shoot themselves in the foot by trying to “explain” their situation, when the judge and State genuinely would rather give you the benefit of the doubt, and give you a chance to fix things and move on.

So many cases where I was like, whelp, we were gonna do probation but this guy probably just needs to sit in jail, or similar lol.

/u/Bubbay

The best results I ever got in traffic court were when the only three words I said the entire time were “Yes, Your Honor” when he called me up and again when he asked if his decision to drop the no-insurance ticket (I didn't have the current card when I got pulled over), drop the severity of the speeding ticket, and to give me a deferment on it was acceptable.

He started talking and it seemed to be going well, so if figured just shutting up was my best course of action.

I was a like 15 in the mid 80s and my mom was a librarian at a college. She had an Internet account because of that. Usenet was a thing, and probably still is. This was before the WWW.

I had a BBS at the time. 1 line coming into my house paid for thanks to my job making pizzas at Chuck E Cheese. I grew it to 4 lines, and then a T1 when I moved out and had my own house. 11 servers in a spare room serving up MUDs and porn.

So I started connecting to her account in the 80s and downloading porn from Usenet and putting it on my BBS. I filtered through probably 100,000 pictures of everything you can possibly imagine. I would stay up until 4am filtering through pictures to put on my BBS where I would charge people $30 a month to download them. Very lucrative.

As a side effect my wife wonders why I don't want to watch porn. I've seen 100,000 vaginas and dicks. I'm good on that. I don't know what percentage of the population of the country's dicks and vaginas I've seen but it's up there.

I've seen 100,000 vaginas and dicks. I'm good on that. I don't know what percentage of the population of the country's dicks and vaginas I've seen but it's up there.

There are ~254 million adults in the US (making an assumption here). If you've seen 100,000 genitals, and assuming there were all from different people, you've seen ~0.039% of the US population's genitals.

[Edit: Corrected the number of adults].

/u/IAmBadAtInternet

So, basically, those are rookie numbers. Gotta pump them up!

A dickie; a dingus; a donger; a dork -
A Peter; a Percy; a piston; a pork -
A snake and a schlong and a schnitzel and sub -
A wang, or a wong, or a wiener to rub -

A pussy; a pocket; a coochie; a cunt -
A foof and a flange or the fur at the front -
A taco; a beaver; a growler; a gap -
A small sausage wallet; a penis fly trap -

A heat-seeking hammer; a hose with a head -
A fleshy wee fella, depravity-fed -
A penis; a pecker; a private; a prick -
The deepest of divers; a dagger; a dick -

The old golden palace; a fish mitten too -
A poon or a pooter; a one python zoo -
A trim or a quim or a muff or a dam -
A gash or a slash or a cockpit and clam -

A bedtime banana; a trouser surprise -
An underwear serpent with bollocks for eyes -

Whatever the nethers of woman or man -
I've just about witnessed as much as I can.

The real answer is total lack of consequences.
Which is why I like to very loudly ask, in a friendly manner and with a smile on my face:

“Excuse me, why are you cutting in line?”

The support you get from the rest of the line is always 100% positive.

/u/Mago515

I reported line cutters at a six flags once. Security found us in line, we pointed them out, and when the group got to the front of the line they were told they have to go wait again.
They threw a fit so my sister and I were asked to write statements. We ended up getting both our tickets upgraded to season passes and we each got 20 of their ride skip tickets for like 30 minutes of our time.

Would be a dick again.

One wild and winsome day -
He thought it might be rather cool
To skip his class and play.

He ran around the schoolyard gate
With whoops of jumping joy -
Until his teachers stood in wait
And caught the wayward boy.

“Oh what disdain and what disgrace,”
They said and sadly sighed.

They put him in a secret place.

And Timmy fucking died.

I had an 'aunt' who brought her boyfriend to her husband's funeral. Her husband had killed himself. So, I'm going with bringing a lover to your spouse's funeral.

/u/CappuccinoBreve

My friend's husband brought his girlfriend to their divorce hearing, holding her hand the whole time. She has no doubts at all about divorcing his stupid ass now.

/u/SunGlassBitch

Honestly, it seems like he didn't have any doubts about divorcing her either.

/u/Archleon

I always wonder what the other side is to stories like these.

/u/FriscoeHotsauce

Honestly, divorce is usually a result of both parties not being right for each other. Sometimes it's more obvious who is in the wrong, like, my uncle has been divorced 3 times (hmm, wonder if he's the common thread). A different uncle has had one divorce, and it was kinda sudden and took the family by surprise. The second Uncle has a more interesting story worth looking at, on one hand his wife was the one that started the divorce (she contacted a lawyer first). But she had a chronic illness, and he had to work enough for both of them. As far as I can tell, he wasn't home much because he was supporting 5 people by himself, and she became resentful because she had to manage the house without him more or less, and that's not a position she wanted to be in.

After the fact, it kinda looks like it had probably been a long time coming, and they waited until their kids were 18 then promptly divorced. Pretty tragic looking back on their marriage.

/u/Vandechoz

like, my uncle has been divorced 3 times (hmm, wonder if he's the common thread)

I hear so many stories about people just constantly being terrible judges of character, and ending up in bad relationship after bad relationship. Their judgement is definitely an important part of the blame, even if each individual case was still the other party doing something unforgivable.

/u/MinagiV

My mom has only been in 2 serious serious relationships. (Probably a few more casual ones before she married my father.) She divorced my douche of a father when I was 13, and eventually started dating someone else. They got engaged when I was 18... He turned out to be a lying sack of shit. My mom has sworn off dating, because she clearly has no judgment skills. In her own words, "They looked great on paper. They were just terrible human beings."

Edit: I truly appreciate everyone's stories, but it's been 15+ years and she's still dealing with stepdouche's bullshit (my father fucked off to the other side of the country, right back to his mommy). She will never consider another relationship while he's around being a prick (because my sisters that live with him are horrible gossips and bring him back aaaaallll the news ).

Painful, but sometimes it seems like wonderful.
My wife, the love of my life, died ten days ago. She was 33 years old. She was diagnosed with cancer on February 2018, three months after we got married.
I became her caretaker and fully supported her while she lived with the disease and when she died of it. I quit my job, spent all my savings, gave up my life for her. I am glad I did it.
I am now trying to rebuild my life from the ashes, without her. I have a lot of support from her friends and my friends, but I still feel most days I won't make it, I can't make it without her. This is too hard.
At times, I remember the wonderful miracle of our love and all the things we learned together, how much I've grown and transformed, how much she was loved until the very end... and life feels beautiful.

When days were hard and nights were tough -
When rivers coursed their journey rough -
I longed to wake and wait a while
To see her sleep,
and watch her smile.

We didn't care for what's outside -
No wind-whipped world or raging tide,
Nor pain or loss or duty, debt,
Could bend or break our safety net.

I dreamt to wake and rise each day
Without a single word to say,
But just a thought - a moment's bliss -
To think that life was made for this.

And though it's hard to say farewell -
To share our final tale to tell,
And times are tough,
and life is rough -

I know I loved her well enough.

and even more,
In dreams you've always waited for.

You dream of things you've hoped were true,
And things you always thought you knew,
And when you do,
You dream each night
Of what could be, and what just might.

But now you think inside your head
That all those thoughts and words unsaid,
And all you've always hoped to do -
Perhaps they're just not made for you.

Well fuck that noise.

They are for you.

As much as yours as others too.

And life is hard,
and life is tough,
But you, my friend -

are good enough.

#2611 – Cops of reddit, what is the most "What the fuck happened here?" moment you've experienced?

2019-08-25 14:41:42

/u/HelpIsWhatINeedPls

/u/Vict0r117

I used to be a cop. We got a call from a guy who claimed to be the victim of a robbery and was incapacitated in his home and had only just managed to reach his phone and call us. We arrived to a trailer home that was totally empty except for a man in hardcore fetish gear tied to some sort of sex swing. I mean, there was nothing else in this house except the gimp tied to the sex swing. Nothing, no furniture, not even curtains.

"Okay dude, WHAT THE FUCK?"

sex-gimp: Well you see, officer, I hired two asian hookers to spank me while I was in the swing, nothing illegal there, no sexual acts, just some spanking and they'd leave. Well, the girls arrived, tied me to the swing, then, two asian guys showed up beat the living shit out of me. Then pulled up a Uhaul trailer and stole literally everything that I own before leaving me hanging here with my cell phone because they said they knew nobody would believe my story anyways, but the cops would probably chase them for a murder. I still don't know if I believe his story, but never found any evidence to suggest that he was lying either. I just didnt find anything at all.

/u/HelpIsWhatINeedPls

Woah.. Thats certainly a "what the fuck happened here" story.

And in his swing,
he slowly swung,
A shining shape in seamless suit,
A leather form from which there hung
A single black stilettoed boot.

He turned around against his will,
And there, they saw with doubt and fear,
A string of beads were hanging still
From somewhere deep inside his rear.

And by the whips of string and hide,
The cuffs and hooks and hoists and chains,
A gag and ball were loose beside
A bridle, rope and bit and reins.

And so it was he turned and then,
They saw him swing in silence slow,
Until he faced them all again,
And said:

”... I can explain this though.”

Fun story: I used to be a mobile dog groomer, and we had a customer who was a member of the Latin Kings. Rolled up expecting the worst, and found a serene home with spoiled dogs, a polite family who gave us cookies as a tip, and the most terrifying and large Hispanic man I've ever met. He looked like the physical embodiment of the name "Chongo" and was covered head to toe in disturbing tats.

Super friendly guy, left us a great review, and we later got calls from other Kings members who wanted to use our services. Pretty surreal walking into a room (while wearing bright scrubs) full of guns, coke, angry dudes in wifebeaters, and being paid generously for washing some lieutenant's wife's poodle. 2019-08-24 16:04:43

/u/v1ralsp1ral

/u/tomf4no

Wild ducks have penises up to 40cm in length. The penis is curly like a pig's tail and can either be turning clockwise or counter-clockwise. When a male duck has found a partner, the female duck's internal reproduction organs will automatically start to twist in the same direction as the male's. Like a lock that adjusts to the shape of a key
You will be wondering why. Well.... that's because wild ducks are notorious for rape. No species of birds has as many rapes as wild ducks. The matching of the curls of the reproductive organs is a primary defense mechanism for the rapes. Other defense mechanisms include a "sperm-lock", when unwanted sperm enters the female, she can guide it away from her egg-cells. Oh and there are about 3 female births for every male birth, that's because so many female ducks get killed during these rapes.
Ducks are vile

/u/TrumpStinks2020

If it is a legitimate duck rape, the body has ways of shutting it down?

#2605 – What was your “I need to grow up” moment that actually made you grow up?

2019-08-23 17:04:17

/u/network_not_found

/u/refreshing_username

A key moment in my development happened in a summer job I had when I was 18. One of my duties at this small industrial facility was to open up the garage-style overhead doors at the start of the day and close them at the end. One day I went to close them and discovered one had been pulled so far up that the roller had come out of its track, and I couldn't get it to go back down.

I got Frank, the low man on the totem pole at this place (besides me and the other summer hand). He looked up at it and said “Did you do this?” I hemmed and hawed and explained that it wasn’t my fault, that there should have been a stop or a guide or something to keep that from happening. Again he asked “Did you do this?” Again I evaded.

Finally he said “Stop making excuses, admit you fucked up, and let’s fix it.”

I almost uttered some more bullshit but instead said “Yeah, I did fuck that up. Let’s fix it.” And we did.

That lesson is still fresh after a third of a century.

&#x200B;

Edit: to be clear, I’m the one that pulled the thing off track. Some people are opining that this was bullshit, that it wasn’t my fault and that I shouldn’t have been held responsible. They’re completely missing the point. Sure, you can parse this situation to where it wasn’t my fault. But that’s a waste of energy. It’s so much simpler to own up to your own actions. “Yes, I pulled it up too far, and it came off the track.” This simple, true admission cuts past all the ifs, ands & buts, clearing the way for me to spend energy seeking a solution instead of playing defense.

In life, you won't be always right.
You'll lie awake at times at night
And think about the how, the way
You fucked it up -
and that's okay.

You'll get it wrong.
You'll make mistakes.
You'll turn a bend and hit the brakes
And see the proof, the truth, the sign
You fucked it up -
and that's just fine.

You'll be at fault.
You'll be to blame.
You'll trip, you'll slip and feel the shame
Of each mistake arrive anew.

But folks fuck up.

That's what we do.

A man with authority walks into a bar. He orders everyone around.

He spoke, content, and sipped his drink,
And said, “you know, I really think
The more I sink,
the more I sup,
The more I empty all my cup,
The smarter I become,” he sighed,

And finished, “well...

An Englishman, Scotsman and Irishman walk into a bar and begin drinking. Soon they noticed a large glass vase of gold coins in the corner and asked the barman what was it there for.

The Barman told them: “that is there is the prize for anyone who can 1:Drink a full bottle of tequila in two minutes; 2:Go into that room over there with a lion inside and pull a thorn from the lions foot; 3: finally go upstairs and make love to a 100 year old woman”.

The Prize money was too much for the men to pass over so they agreed to try.

The Englishman goes first, but after only half the tequila he collapses drunk.

The Scotsman is next. He downs the tequila and staggers to the lions room. The door is closed and there is a massive scream and soon afterwards he stumbles back out of the room with his hand bitten off.

The Irishman drinks the tequila and stumbles towards the lions room. The door is closed behind him and almost immediately there are massive screams and shouts coming from behind the door, screams which last for nearly ten minutes... There is banging up against the sides of the door and everything and then silence. The Irishman emerges battered, bleeding and torn - "now" he says "where is that lady with the thorn in her foot"

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 1

When Little Timmy took the bet
One fair and fateful day -
He thought with joy of shrinking debt,
And what his friends would say.

He cast aside the door and chain -
He stepped beyond the room -
And there he saw the hulking mane,
The claws inside the gloom.

He paused to see the paws, the size,
The shape, the strength, the might -
The pair of evil, watching eyes,
That shone from out the night.

He didn't fret.
He didn't frown.
He reached below with pride.

And Timmy pulled his zipper down.

And Timmy fucking died.

Ping pong. I made the mistake of playing an old guy that hangs out at one of the bars and he fucking wrecked me. It wasn't even close, he returned all of my best serves effortlessly and would put the craziest spin on all of his shots. He gave me good advice afterwards and told me I play too fast for my own good, I bought him a drink and shamefully went back to my friends.

/u/BullGooseLooney904

Me too. The guys in my dorm freshmen year would play pretty darn competitive ping pong every single night. We all got really good, and I was one of the best. I guess word got out that our dorm was a good place to play ping pong, so we started getting people come from all over campus. One night, this one guy came that absolutely dominated all of us. Balls flying like bananas, balls spinning sideways off the table. It was just ridiculous. I remember he beat me 21-4, and I played really well for myself.

She softly sighed and pondered grim:
"I wonder what will come of Jim?"
For though the lad was only ten,
The future wasn't bright for him.

And so she stood frustrated when,
Ignoring James and John and Jen,
She turned to Jim to speak and then -

"BANANA!" Jimmy spoke again.

#2590 – McDonald’s discontinues the Happy Meal and intruduces the Angry Meal. What kind of food and toys are in it?

/u/MadcapRecap

/u/smileedude

I'm pretty sure there isn't a way to make an angry meal that doesn't make the parents angry.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)  × 3  × 3

“The Angry Meal”

“Does it come with a toy?”
I had asked with a smile,
And she answered with joy,
As she grinned for a while:
”Oh you'd better believe
That you'll love what we'll pick!
In the meal you'll receive
Is a punch to the dick.

“And instead of the fries,
It's a punch to the dick.
You'll enjoy the surprise,
It's a punch to the dick.
Take a sip from your drink,
It's a punch to the dick.
Is it good?
No I think
It's a punch to the dick.”

So I pondered the meal
Through a moment or three,
And I started to feel
That it wasn't for me,
But I thought what the hell,
For at least it was quick,
And I ordered,
and well...

'twas a punch to the dick.

I have yes. Brings to mind... There was web site which you could track one dollar bills by serial number. You would occasionally see a dollar bill with a little rubber stamp with the web site on it - you where supposed to add to the list to track the bill when you looked up the serial number. Not saw one in a long time, but than again in recent years I rarely use or carry cash were as used to almost all the time.

“Ode to a Penny”

Tiny tarnished metal penny,
Were you always waiting here?
Have you been to places many?
Have you travelled far and near?

Were you traded in a market?
Were you spent on something sweet?
Or a car so they could park it
By the meter in the street?

Were you left in someone's pocket
On a rainy afternoon -
Who was working on a rocket
They were sending to the moon?

Have you heard a thousand voices?
Have you seen a thousand sights?
Were you flipped for tricky choices?
Were you dropped from dizzy heights?

Tiny tarnished metal penny -
Were you always waiting here?
Have you been to places many?
Have you travelled far and near?

So what if you're only

So what if you're feigning

I do phone and cam work via Niteflirt and Skype and I cannot even begin to list all of the strange and weird conversations I've had with clients but a good one to start off with would have to be with RobotMan. RobotMan was this guy who'd call in and ask me to refer to myself in "robotically anatomically correct terms" such as "chest panel" and "crotch panel" and even wanted to send me a silver jumpsuit to wear on camera so I could LOOK like a robot (in his eyes, at least). I definitely indulged his fantasy because he'd send me $1000 an hour.

/u/fluffyplague

I don't normally do hypnosis stuff because I find it super boring, but I had a caller several years back who wanted to be hypnotized into being his own dick. No, I don't understand how that works, either.

So for about two hours, I gradually worked this guy through an intricate process of sinking down into his dick, then into his balls, then his dick somehow fucked his balls like some kind of moebius strip of cock and balls.

Eventually he came so hard he literally fell off his chair while screaming so loud I thought my eardrums would burst. Then he had to hang up immediately and wash his hands/dick because he was a germophobe and his own cum disgusted him.

As for me, I had said the words dick, penis, cock, and balls so many times in those two hours that they were just meaningless mouth noise. I've been doing phone sex for over 25 years now, and I have some others that are just as weird, if y'all are interested.

/u/TheLastTraveler

How is anything just as weird?!

/u/fluffyplague

Oh, honey.

I have a guy who is saving money to pay me to make a custom video of me eating a roasted rabbit while I talk to it as if it's him – it's a stand-in for himself in his cannibal fantasies. I have a caller (one of my favorite regulars, he's very sweet and his calls are very easy for me) who likes for me to read him stories he e-mails to me that he's written about tickle torturing Hollywood actresses.

I have an elderly man who calls me to talk about his obsession with vintage girdles and bras.

I have many sissy callers who are into simulating menstrual periods by wearing pads or putting tampons up their butts.

One in particular is fascinated by old-fashioned sanitary belts.

Men will send me pictures of their wives and ask me to insult/demean them as I talk about beating their wives up while they watch.

One guy has a fantasy about a rich white woman who grows a big black dick, and the things that she does with said big black dick.

This is just scratching the surface, mind you.

I have an elderly man who calls me to talk about his obsession with vintage girdles and bras.

” ... and now, of course, the bras are small,
The bras are small, and most are gone,
And most are... wait, I can't recall.
They're not the same, but moving on -

“Twas nineteen sixty-six and late
When first emerged the cut brassiere,
And then... or was it sixty-eight?
No, sixty-six is just the year -

“Twas nineteen sixty-six, that's right,
When pointed bras were all the rage,
And what a fine and dandy sight
To see them in my youthful age!

“My friend, 'twas Tim, he thought to say -
Or was it Frank or Paul instead?
Well nevermind, he said one day:

... I can't remember what he said.

“But all the same, they marched the store
To chide the way they looked below!”
He sighed to think of times before,
And cleared his throat:

“Now girdles though...”

I have an ex who used to do phone sex work. She had a dude call in one time and ask her to sing Happy Birthday to him. She got the impression that he wasn't really trying to get off, so much as have somebody acknowledge his existence.

She had callers more than once who she just ended up in long conversations with. Guys that were talking about what was stressing them out, what was going on in their lives, the shit they were dealing with in their own relationships, etc. Those are the ones that stuck with her. Not the horny frat boys who were calling on a dare or whatever, just dudes who wanted to hear a sweet voice say nice things to them and listen to what they were saying.

Of course, there was also one dude who wanted to listen to her rub her own feet. It takes all kinds.

Having something you HAVE to go do everyday is great. It gets you to start moving and once you're up and about its easier to do other things.

Instead of getting out of bed with just enough time to get ready I get up with time to jog, eat breakfast with my wife and daughter. I started meal prepping to make sure we could have healthy lunches and dinners. I also started doing more self care. I am down 15 pounds and feel a lot better

One day Mao Zedong saw a sparrow eating grain. Thinking that the sparrows were hurting China's grain supply, he and the Communist Party launched the Four Pests Campaign. The Chinese military and population killed every sparrow they could find. Embassies didn't allow the Chinese to kill sparrows on their property, so the Chinese banged pots and pans outside the embassies 24/7 until the sparrows died of exhaustion. Unfortunately for the Chinese, sparrows mainly eat insects, not grain. The locust population exploded and 43 million people starved to death.

Ow fun, it's now 5am.

There are stories in the silence
Of a trip to shining stars -
Of a journey through the darkness
On a rocket-ship to Mars -
Of a place above the heavens,
Or beyond the tallest tree -
Where tomorrow lasts forever,
And the waves are waving free.

There are stories told in mumbles
Of the deepest caverns cold -
Of a tumble under wonders
In the search for ancient gold -
Of a trek towards a treasure,
And a step on olden sands -
Of a distance you can measure
With your feet and with your hands.

There are stories made in murmurs
And they're spoken soft and slow -
Of a night descending gently,
And a light that shines below -
Of a love uncomplicated,
And a promise made to keep -
There are stories in the silence
As you drift away to sleep.

The battle of Alesia.

Julius Caesar's attacking some Gauls in modern day France, and they go hide in a castle on top of a hill. Caesar's army isn't big enough to take them all at once, and the Gauls have reinforcements coming so a siege is impossible. So Caesar just builds a bigger castle around the one he's attacking. He literally just built two walls back to back in a ring around the castle. The first Gaul army was already too small to defeat Caesar, and his fortifications only gave him a greater advantage. The reinforcements were also unable to defeat Caesar's army now that he was behind several layers of spike pits and both earthen and wooden walls. Plus the Gauls inside had no way to communicate with the reinforcements outside, so they couldn't coordinate attacks. Both Gallic armies were defeated as they attacked Caesar's newly built fortifications, and Caesar emerged victorious. It's probably my favorite battle of all time.

The Gauls inside the castle said:
"We only need to wait -
For extra troops are just ahead
To seal ol' Caesar's fate!

"He might elect to wait beside,
Beyond this castle gate -
But when he does," they said with pride,
"We'll seal ol' Caesar's fate!

"For sieges only go so far
When armies, grand and great -
Are almost twice the size you are,
They'll seal ol' Caesar's fate!"

"We'll watch them fight and watch them fall,
Till all his hordes are gone!"
But then ol' Caesar built a wall,
And whispered:

"... bring it on."

“Boiiing,” arrived the noise again -
Somewhere close behind and then -
”Boiiing,” arrived the noise once more -
Just around the kitchen door.

Turned the door and looked to where -
Where below he stared at that.

I'm a face painter who does children's birthday parties. I've never had any super sketchy experiences, just a few run-down homes but the kids always have fun.

I went to one house, kinda messy and smelly, but no big deal. I started setting up my supplies and I heard a weird 'peep' sound above me. I look up to see a guinea pig running through a clear plastic tube attached to the ceiling. Then I take a good look around the house and notice the whole place is covered with a network of guinea pig tubes. The mom noticed me looking around and nonchalantly told me they have like 10 guinea pigs.

2019-08-01 13:27:00

/u/valerian217

When I was a kid, my family went to a Pizzeria Uno and before the food came I went to inspect the plumbing.

They had those sinks where you press down on the knob and the water would flow, with the knob slowly raising back up before it would turn off after 20 seconds.

I used my fist and hit the top of the knob and the thing just popped off and a huge geyser of water was erupting nonstop. Me and another kid were in there, we looked at each other and just bolted from the bathroom.

I got back to my seat and just sat there silent. Then my mom went to use the bathroom, and when she came back she told us this story of how there was a pool in the bathroom hallway and the manager and an employee were in the men's room slipping and sliding trying to shutoff the water.

My whole family was laughing at the story, but I just sat there silent. They asked me what's wrong and I told them it was me that did it.

They never fail to mention it every time we drive past a Pizzeria Uno, even now 20 years later. I've never stepped foot in one since then.

Edit:

Since a lot of people are asking, "inspecting the plumbing" was a joke my family made when I'd go to pee at a restaurant. I'd usually be a glutton about free drink refills, and would always have to get up and pee mid meal, so my family always joked I was obligated to inspect the plumbing at every establishment.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [\[Link\]](#)

... and still, in the calm of an evening in bed
That singular moment replays in my head -
I think of the feeling I felt as a boy -
'Tis much to remember the sound of their joy.

They laughed,
for they hadn't a reason to see -
They laughed,
for they couldn't imagine 'twas me -
They laughed,
with the freedom of comfort and pride -
They laughed,
while I curdled in darkness inside.

How well I remember the why, and the way -
The shock and the blame and the shame of the day.

I dream, and I hear it.

I still see it yet.

That night in the bathroom I'll never forget.

/u/dyxless

I drove a taxi one summer in a party resort. One night, 2 guys jumped in and yelled ” follow that car”, which was another taxi that I knew the driver of and I obliged. Turns out, one of their mates was drunk af and decided to just go to their hotel w/o telling them. They only saw the guy leaving the club drunk and they thought he was going to a strip club without them. He was actually going to their hotel, as he was hammered.

Another time 3 girls jumped in the car and said follow that car. The car in question was a black sedan, tinted back windows. Yet wasn’t that shady imho. We follow the car for 15 minutes, leaving the resort going into a forest. The girls start freaking out, as one of their friends( also a girl) was seen stepping into that car. Yeah, turns out, that she just hooked up with some guy in the club they were earlier and she was about to suck his D when we pulled up next to them. Weirdest summer.

It’s not a long and lengthy bore,
Nor task to dread,
I’ve always said:
I’d rather shake another’s head!

“There’s not a thing could ever beat
The sense when heads, in passion, meet,
And I’m the best!
The blow-by-blow,
Aficionad-fellati-o!

“Enthusiasts alike unite!

This sort of happened to me about 20 years ago. Not a taxi driver although I was driving down a main road and saw a dude running around with a baseball bat and then come cop cars parked on a side street. Young me decided that I want to get involved so I pulled down the side street and found a cop on foot a good distance away from his car. I told him about baseball bat guy and he gets on his radio. Guess he got an immediate update on his radio, looks at how far he is from his car and he says, "Can you drive me down the road?" I'm thinking fuck yeah, and tell him to jump in. He does, and I am seriously driving around back roads with a cop riding shotgun giving me directions while on his radio. Only lasted for about 2 minutes and then he jumps out to pursue the guy on foot. Not a very satisfying ending to the story, since I never found out what happened. But damn it thats my story

No responsibilities, no stress, no work, no school, just having fun outside with friends all day for months.

The guy died. And I went to a nearby gas station not knowing what to do (was 18). When the tow truck pulled my car up on to it, there were a bunch of blood and guts on the bottom. I couldnt get that image out of my head

#2553 – All You can eat buffet workers what are your horror stories?

2019-07-25 22:18:19

/u/Tristanmemes123

/u/Jef_Wheaton

Not a “Horror” story, just funny.

I worked at Wendy's when they had salad bars. You could get a single-serving bowl (They used to serve eat-in chili in Styrofoam bowls, and the Large doubled as a chili bowl), or “All you can eat” platters. (The Taco Salad bottom plate.)

On a slow afternoon, this guy came in and got a single serving bowl. After a few minutes, our manager motioned to me and the sandwich guy to discreetly take a look at the salad he was making.

The guy had filled the bowl with salad, then made a ring of overlapping cucumber slices to extend the lip of the bowl upwards. He filled that with salad, then added another ring. It took several minutes to build this thing, but by the time he'd finished, he had a tower of salad well over a foot tall, with multiple rings of cucumber slices containing it.

That salad was an engineering marvel. He carefully carried it back to his table, sat down, then looked up guiltily as our manager walked out to him.

The manager handed him a “free item” coupon, and said, “That is the most impressive salad I have ever seen. Your next one is on me.”

/u/diesel-revolver

I have read about this practice before. The article below describes the act in Chinese pizza huts.

<https://www.google.com/amp/s/kotaku.com/how-chinese-ingenuity-destroyed-salad-bars-at-pizza-hut-834835079/amp>

/u/ButtmanNaNaNanButtman

I read a similar story (I think at a Chinese buffet that served all you can eat rice/meat/veggie bowls) in the last buffet stories thread. It’s amazing how far people will go for a little more shitty food.

/u/Jazz-Cigarettes

I think it says a lot about the quirks of human psychology and how evolutionary hoarding traits are still buried in our brains, where the instant you say “free x” or “$10 for unlimited X”, some people’s instinctive reaction is “HOW CAN I EXPLOIT THIS TO GET WAY MORE OF THAT NEARLY WORTHLESS STUFF THAN I COULD EVER NEED IN A TRILLION LIFETIMES?!”

'Twas lettuce, tomatoes and peppers and bean -
'Twas onion and olive and spinach between -
'Twas rocket and radish and carrot and cress -
A fountain of flavour,
a mountain,
no less.

It flowered, a tower of pasta and rice -
With solid green girders of cucumber slice -
With brickwork of feta to shore the ascent -
And ranch-covered mortar of mayo cement.

And so, with a smile and a head full of glee -
He crossed to his seat with his salad for three -
He gulped and he gorged till his stomach was sore -
And when he was finished...

... he went back for more.

#2552 – Have you ever felt you don't know/have forgotten who you really are? That you've spent years just adapting to surroundings to make life easier and don't know what's the real you anymore? If so, how did you overcome this?
2019-07-25 16:39:52

/u/amber_a_solas

/u/SteakAndNihilism

There's probably no "real you" that exists across time. That's just a thing you built up when you were younger to give yourself a stable identity and core values.

The you now is just as real as the you then. We all adapt to our surroundings and change to make our lives easier. There's absolutely nothing wrong with that.

If you're unhappy with your life now, you can adapt by changing. You need to believe that, and you probably know it since it seems to be something you're afraid of. But this is the real you now, and you need to focus on the needs of that person, not some idealized phantom from the past.

/u/Martholomule

This is exactly what I needed to hear

/u/M0shka

Literally moved to a completely new city all by myself yesterday. I know noone, but I know I just have to give myself enough time and I know I'll settle in just fine. Nashville is a place I've always wanted to live. The music, the street lights, and the ability to get lost in the crowd.

I honestly feel like I'm in a dream. I don't know what to do or even how to actually move into this big city. I'm just learning everything on the fly and have no idea what I'm even doing sometimes. Thankfully, my super amazing instincts kicked in and now it feels like I'm living 2 personalities. One being instinct M0shka who makes the decisions about where I need to go next, where to search for an apartment, where to eat food, where to travel etc and then the normal, me, M0shka who now just sits back and enjoys the ride.

If you see a scrawny Indian kid with a beard walking across downtown Nashville today looking clueless, it'd probably be me.

/u/hpbrowntown

You can do it! Lots of communities you can join as well if you ever start feeling lonely. You've got this. :)

/u/Harveyder

Since I have a personality disorder I've often asked myself where "it" ends ("it" being the unhealthy patterns I've developed through the years) and where the "real" me begins. Since a lot of my recovery has been based on learning by external input (i.e. therapy, studying other people's reactions, reading etc.) I honestly don't feel like I even have my own identity, I'm just the amalgamation of hundreds of people, mixed with past traumas and unhealthy patterns.

I have some personality traits that are truly mine, both good and bad, but I honestly learn more every year. Honestly I don't think you're ever truly "done" with yourself. I would personally steer clear if anyone claiming to know themselves inside and out since that just sounds stagnant to me.

/u/Yancy_Farnsworth

| I'm just the amalgamation of hundreds of people

I don't know if it helps, but everyone gets influenced by those around them, whether they want to or not. I've noticed that I unconsciously pick up those traits and others around me pick up mine. It's our nature. It can be healthy, it can be unhealthy. It can be in the direction we want to go in or not. But I think it's helpful to be aware of that and use it to your advantage. Figure out if those around you are the type of person you want to be. If not, try and find those that are. It's not easy, but being aware of it may help.

Though mainly and mostly together in mind -
With hope for ahead and at peace with behind -
In essence and earnest, I have to confide:
I'm still not for certain I know who's inside.

But that's what's amazingly freeing, you see -
Perhaps there just isn't a definite "me".
And maybe I'm made up of others like you -
But maybe you're made up of me really too.

I guess you decide for how long, or how far -
And if you're not happy, you change who you are.

Best advice I have is this: When we experience things, we make 'maps' of what happened. We all have maps of our time in school, how people treat us, all of our experiences. We also make maps about other people, we make assumptions about others based on what we see or hear. We get maps from others about us too, especially friends and parents. What they tell us we are, what we think they see when they look at us, what we think they think about us, etc etc etc.

People tend to focus on maps, and label themselves, pigeon-hole themselves into roles and what they think they should do, feel, or be based on the maps that they have.

You are not a map. You are a 3D terrain of whatever beautiful biome you want to be. Don't stare at a map all day and forget to look up at what it really is.

Edit: holy cow, ty for medals. New to reddit, first i've gotten any # #2550 – Doctors and nurses of Reddit who have delivered babies to mothers who clearly cheated on their husbands, what was that like?

2019-07-25 06:56:25

/u/NoTalentAzKlown

/u/TorrenceMightingale

Had a patient who came in to ER for UTI with her boyfriend of 4 months (his words). She was 19. Acting extremely dramatic for just having UTI. We tell her we need urine. She urges us to cath her which is really unusual but she says she can't pee so me and other nurse assume the position to put in a catheter with her lying on the gurney. At this point nurse screams, "call L&D!! She's crowning!!"

L&D nurse gets in just in time to grab the child as it shoots out into her hands and is a living breathing baby.

The girl swears she had no idea she was pregnant. They wheel her off to postpartum and the guy is just kind of left standing there, dumbstruck.

"We only been dating 4 months. I had no idea she was pregnant. She never mentioned it at all." As he just buried his head in his knees while he was sitting on the floor against the hallway wall.

I felt so bad for the guy.

/u/ET318

maybe im wrong but wouldnt a pregnant person have at least some physical indication that they are pregnant? Like I know theres the fear of asking if someone is pregnant and they arent but like, if youre dating, wouldnt that be fairly evident over time?

Edit: just want to thank everyone that has responded. I now understand that it is not uncommon for women to not show “typical” pregnancy signs during a pregnancy. I have learned more than I expected today

/u/TubaJesus

If you ever see the show “I didn’t know I was pregnant” its more common than you’d think. some ladies just plain won’t show at all and others may just look a bit plumper but not obviously pregnant.

/u/ET318

Maybe not obvious then but don’t pregnant people tend to have different behavior patterns than they do when they aren’t pregnant?

Edit: as I said in my question above this. I’ve learned a good bit from this and realize my assumptions were incorrect. I also realize that my wording of this question was foolish and that I did not think about the guy not having a proper baseline. Thank you all for pointing that out.

/u/FoxyRin

Sometimes it’s easy to brush off. All the symptoms are. Morning sickness for a week or two? Clearly just a stomach bug or something you’re eating. Cramping or movement? Just some gas. Hormonal changes? Blame it on stress. Larger chest? Hormones are weird. No period? They were never regular anyway. Not showing? Either one of those people who barely do or already on the bigger side. It doesn’t help that almost any symptom you ever Google will come up saying you’re pregnant. Congestion? Pregnant. Gassy? Pregnant. Weird pain? Pregnant.

I made it to 15 weeks before I knew I was pregnant and honestly wouldn’t even think it now at 20 weeks if I didn’t already know. 100% brushed it off as my PCOS acting up and assumed the throwing up was just heartburn acting up. I didn’t get concerned until I started getting dizzy for several days in a row and assumed something was really wrong.

Funnily enough, I Googled my symptoms at this point and I was 100% sure I was hypoglycemic. Nope, just pregnant.

/u/ginger_momra

Same. After a series of rationalizations and unfortunate coincidences I was 16 weeks into my 2nd pregnancy before a test was even done. My 'just tired after that bad flu over Christmas' is now 6'2" tall.

/u/witnge

I was actually trying to get pregnant, disappointed that I kept getting negative tests, husband and I both get a bad cold, took some time off trying as we're really tired and not in the mood. Didn't get better even a week after my husband was all better. Still negative pregnancy tests. Start contemplating fertility testing. Period is a no show, so now I'm sick and my irregular period is even more irregular. Decide to keep bonking until my period comes. Getting very confused as my ovulation chart seems to indicate I've ovulated but my period hasn't showed up. Figure the cold threw the temps out. Bummer why haven't I ovulated? If I don't ovulate I won't get a period and I can't get pregnant. Why aren't I getting over this cold? Maybe it's more than a cold and it's such a serious infection my body is too stressed to ovulate. I feel so tired and on the verge of throwing up. Oh wait i did throw up.

These pregnancy test are about to expire. Might as well pee on one since its been a few weeks since I maybe ovulated. Hang on is that a second line? Holy crap that's a second line. I threw up every day after that for the whole pregnancy. I have not felt well rested since before I caught that cold. She's 3.5 years old now. I hear teenagers sleep more so maybe I'll be able to feel rested in 10 more years lol

Edited. So many typos.

Why aren't I getting over this cold? Maybe it's more than a cold and it's such a serious infection my body is too stressed to ovulate...

"You're feeling ill,
I'll tell you why -
My dear, you have an STI.
The sort," the doctor stopped to say:
"The sort that never goes away.

He said: "the swelling soon begins -
It's stomach cramps and double-chins,
And crazy lows and dizzy heights,
And strife and stress and sleepless nights.

"In eighteen years,
I must admit,
The symptoms lessen quite a bit."

"It's HIV?" was her reply.

"Not HIV ...

... B.A. B.Y."

Once saw a man standing next to an extremely expensive looking home jump headfirst into a hedge, pull himself out, look at the hedge, and jump back in headfirst. He continued to do this for a while until someone nearby asked him if he were okay, to which he responded with “don’t worry, this is my hedge, I’m just bored”. Still to this day I respect his casual not giving a fuck vibe.

When I’m feeling bored and lonely -
When I’m down for something new -
When I’m lost and really only
At a loss for what to do -

When I’m sick of dull and dreary -
When I’m weary, all at sea -
When I’m feeling tired and teary,
Stuck with nowhere else to be -

Then I make my own decision -
Then I take the chance to go -
Take a leap, and with precision,
Jump in fucking hedges, yo.

People of Earth, your attention please.

This is Prostetnic Vogon Jeltz of the Galactic Hyperspace Planning Council.

As you will no doubt be aware, the plans for development of the outlying regions of the Galaxy require the building of a hyperspatial express route through your star system, and, regrettably your planet is one of those scheduled for demolition.

The process will take slightly less than two of your Earth minutes.

Thank you.

/u/fysicks

There’s no point acting all surprised about it. All the planning charts and demolition orders have been on display in your local planning department in Alpha Centauri for fifty of your Earth years, so you’ve had plenty of time to lodge any formal complaint and it’s far too late to start making a fuss about it now.

/u/Jonsis

“What do you mean you’ve never been to Alpha Centauri? Oh, for heaven’s sake, mankind, it’s only four light years away, you know. I’m sorry, but if you can’t be bothered to take an interest in local affairs, that’s your own lookout. Energize the demolition beams.”

The Addams Family was supposed to subvert the tropes of American sitcoms. So instead of a bickering couple, e.g. the Honeymooners, we have a husband and wife who actually have a strong and passionate marriage. Usually the happy mom and dad are reserved for the "values" sitcoms, which depict ideal families (Leave it to Beaver, the Waldens) and are literally meant to instruct the audience as to how they should behave. The joke of the Addams Family is that they act nothing like how an ideal family is supposed to yet still love each other and have healthy relationships. It's like they're cheekily saying, "See? We don't need your values."

Sorry for my rant I just really love the Addams Family.

To me we are still together, he's just...uh...living impaired...

He's out,
or about,
and he's absent and passed -
He's off,
or away,
and departed at last -
Displaced from the living;
decamped from the live;
He's hard to awaken and tough to revive -

He's done,
or he's dashed,
and disbanded beyond -
He's split,
or he's scattered,
and slow to respond -
But while I remember the feel of him near -

It's not like he's gone.

He just... isn't here.

“So throw off the chains of oppression!” said he -
”Be fairly unfettered,
and free to be free!
Be gone and go on and go forth as you please -
Unbound and unbridled by social decrees!

“Release who you are from the burden of doubt -
And don't be afraid to be you when you're out!
The future is yours and it's ready ahead!”

He waited.

” ... I don't really want to,” she said.

/u/Frisky_Avocado

“But why such restraint?!” He asked in surprise
As a line formed behind him with lustrous eyes
“We want you to feel safe and free in our cities”
Came a cry from behind him – “SHOW US YOUR TITTIES!!!”

“I will not show a single tit.
I will not show a tiny bit.
I will not flash a peek of chest,
A bust or even half a breast.

“I will not show a tiny tip.
I will not show a slip of nip.
I will not, won’t, and will not, no,
I will not flaunt the boob below.

“You see,” said she, “this boob’s for me -
I keep it where it’s meant to be,
And when it is I deign to bare,
There’s no one, not one, else one there.

“And so I will not open up.
You can not see inside my cup.
The fact remains the same, to wit:

I will not show a single tit.”

/u/Frisky_Avocado

“That’s not very progressive,”
The man withdrew his plea.
“To not share those sweet breasts of yours, to not let them roam free.”
“Let them see some daylight!”
“Let them dangle in the breeze!”
The shouts of men anticipating,
Her tits like honey to the bees!
“I’m sorry, but I don’t want to, I just don’t see what for.”
She crossed her arms and that was that, but the men just cried for more.
“Really, it’s a noble cause, we want you to feel equal!
Surely if you don’t agree, your motives might be evil!
So go ahead, take off the dress, undo your bra and see,
How free you’ll feel,

How loose you'll be,
Darling, just say 'yes!'
And take your time, we'll walk the city streets,
maybe a mile,
Show off your newfound freedom - and don't forget to smile!"

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 1  × 2

... she narrowed her eyes with the weariest sigh.
How soon had her noon but meandered awry.
Her morning had started with charm and success...

And now they demanded she take of her dress?

That just wasn't decent.

That just wasn't right.

That just wasn't pleasant, or pleasing, polite.

The crudeness, the rudeness, the shock and the shame -
How dare they request that she show them her frame?

For had they no mother?

No woman revered,

Who told them how awful it is to be jeered?

Or had they no father who taught them to act -

With honour, respect or the virtue of tact?

But such is the lot of a lady, she thought -

Her dreams and achievements belittled to nought.

A blank little figure for perverts to flirt -

Reduced to a haircut and boobs in a skirt.

She looked at them sadly.

She saw with dismay.

A street full of voices with nothing to say.

She waited with patience.

She took in a breath.

They shouted and whistled.

She beat them to death.

It is known

When Little Timmy saw it there,
And spied its eerie glow -
A rusted sign was waiting where
It lay in gloom below.

“BEWARE THE CURSE OF DEATH,” it said,
”THE CURLING EDGE OF DOOM -
FOR THOSE WHO TOUCH SHALL JOIN THE DEAD
TO WALK AMONGST THE TOMB.

“BEWARE THE GROANING GRAVE,” it told,
”THE TWISTED SCOURGE OF FATE -
FOR THOSE WHO TOUCH SHALL NOT GROW OLD WHEN PAIN AND WOE AWAIT.

“BEWARE THIS SHAMEFUL, SINFUL SHRINE, AND RUN BACK HOME TO HIDE.”

But Timmy didn't read the sign.

And Timmy fucking died.

I used to play counter strike 1.6 with one of the funniest and most lively guess I've ever met. He was a lynch-pin for half a dozen other guys in a friendship group that he welcomed me into. They lived about 200 miles south of me in the South of England. For several years we talked and played games together. He would brighten my day. I've never loved a friend like I loved him. Before I met him I had no idea he was sick. Like... Really sick; he had muscular dystrophy for which there is no cure and is a progressively debilitating disease. His form started by paralysing his legs, and working it's way up to his arms and eventually his lungs. It wasn't until a few days before I had arranged for my first ever trip down there that he told me about it. It didn't phase me in the slightest, it made me want to go see him even more. I only saw him in real life twice before he died about a year later. I regret that I couldn't go to his funeral. It was too far away and I couldn't make it.

#2520 – Parents or Reddit: What do your kids think they're being all slick and sneaky about, but you know all about it?

2019-06-29 22:15:04

/u/Erikjb12

/u/billbapapa

My son is making a book for his mom to tell her how much he loves her.

He's still pretty young and just learning to read and write. So slowly, like, over the course of the last few weeks, he'll bring a book up to an adult and ask them to help him read and then ask randomly, "Is the word 'amazing' on this page? Where? Oh, can you help me find a story where they have that word? Oh great, is that the word I'm pointing to?"

Then he disappears for a few minutes, then the cycle will start again with another word.

Slowly he's writing a book for her, one word at a time.

I know because I followed him one time recent and saw he was writing something in a book, then happened to check it out when he was asleep. So now I know his secret. He was up to about two pages and it's really sweet.

I don't know how much longer until he'll deem it finished. But I'm sure I'm the only adult who knows what's up.

edit: that's u/JustTheBeerLight for making me sound a bit smarter than I am.

/u/losingEm

That's precious

/u/billbapapa

I'm a very lucky man.

“I love you as much as a... thingy,” he said -
”... a something,” he wrote with a shake of his head -
”... a waddyacallit,” he whispered and then -
”... a whatsit,” he started,
and started again.

“I love you because you’re amazingly... yes...
You’re sort of, and kind of, and really I guess...”
He buried his head in his hands with a sigh.
He pondered improvements,
and gave it a try.

“I love you, because you... but that’s not enough -
I love you for all sorts of reasons... and stuff.
These words that I’m writing, and writing to you -
They’re all, and besides,
and they’re also, and too...”

And so with frustration he paused for a time -
He scribbled discouraged: “I struggle to rhyme.
But here’s what’s important,” he finished below -

“I love you completely.

I want you to know.”

/u/stumpy_penis

Yup. Used to drink high dollar liquors and craft brews stuff like that now I just drink shitty cheap vodka and occasionally natty/pbr and never go out. Trying to leave it all behind. Easier said than done tho

Edit: thanks for the kind words and encouragement. Each time I relapse and go on a bender getting sober gets harder and the withdrawals are worse :/ even after having seizures I'm still drawn to it. It's fucked.

/u/the_one_true_bool

Quitting is extremely difficult. I was a serious alcoholic for probably about 6-7 years where I was drinking a 1/2 - 3/4 of a fifth of whiskey on top of 6-10 heavy beers every single night. I finally quit and it was insanely hard, and I made it two years. Now I'm back at it again. I completely cut out hard liquor but I still drink an absolute shitload of beer. It's not even 2:00 PM here yet and I've already drank 4 tallboy IPAs (7.25% ABV). It sucks, and alcoholism is expensive as fuck.

#2509 – What’s your worst birthday memory?

2019-06-22 17:55:45

/u/samisatotallycoolguy

/u/PoonSloob

So i had this friend over at my house and it was going to be my 13th birthday. Well my brother who was 17 at the time asked me to make him a shake, and I thought it would be funny to mix in all the worst things i could find. It had ketchup, mustard, soy sauce, Hershey’s chocolate syrup, and plenty more. By the end, it was a brown that visually passed for a chocolate shake. Well I gave it to him, he takes a sip and is gagging. My and my friend think its hilarious, until he decides he is gonna beat my ass. Me and my friend take off running into the kitchen where we are all running left and right around an island. My family keeps a centerpiece of apples or oranges or whatever we feel like putting in a fairly large bowl in the center of the island, to which my brother decides he is tired of chasing us and just grabs an orange. I don’t notice this yet and he launches one at my head, smacking me perfectly in the temple. Orange busts on impact and i got knocked out, on the spot. My friend is scared for his life and at this point I’ve unconsciously pissed myself. I come to and my mom is losing her shit at my brother who feels pretty bad now for knocking me out, then embarrassing me in front of a friend on my birthday. Needless to say, I had a headache that just wouldn’t go away for what felt like forever. We all look back on it now and think its pretty funny but my mom still wants to beat my brothers ass for it. TL;DR: I “pranked” my brother and he knocked me out for it.

When Little Timmy pranked his bro
By making heinous shake -
It didn't take him long to know
He'd made a huge mistake.

At first, of course, he'd laughed with joy
To think of all he'd done -
Until his brother chased the boy
For ill-begotten fun.

He ran his race in quick pursuit -
"I'm sorry, bro!" he cried.
But Timmy's brother grabbed a fruit.

And Timmy fucking died.

Tutenkhamun. Or King Tut as he is sometimes referred. He was a boy pharaoh that only reached the age of maybe 18, born from incest and suffered scoliosis a bad foot (walked with a cane) and contracted malaria, and likely died from an infection from a broken leg. Also when he came to power married his sister and had two miscarriages. This poor boy had lots of power, but was sick all his life and likely his advisors made all decisions for him and eventually succeeded him. Also had a very short reign that ended with Egypt at war (they would lose under his successor).

/u/Notreallypolitical

Sadly, the royal family in Egypt at that time frequently married their half-siblings. The last doc I saw on Tut theorized that he broke his foot in a chariot race. He's not remembered because he was a great ruler but because his pristine tomb was found. Tomb raiders have destroyed and stolen the contents of so many tombs that finding his tomb taught historians a great deal. So Tut wasn't the big deal: finding his intact tomb was.

/u/theknightmanager

IIRC his tomb was also very ... plain when compared to the tombs of more important rulers.

/u/drsquires

Cause he died so young

Edit: loving everyone's input. Got my history degree because I could stop reading about history and going down rabbit holes like these.

When Little Tuten ruled a land
A long, long time ago -
He slowly walked with cane in hand,
And rather lots of woe.

"Alack, alack," he whispered, sad,
"Oh what a fool I am -
You see, it seems my mum's my dad;
My wife's my sister Pam.

"My foot's a source of pain," he spoke,
"My spine's a mess," said he -
"My lands are ruled by other folk,
And not," he sighed, "by me.

"At least I'm king and upper-class,"
The boy declared with pride.

But Tuten broke his leg, alas.

And Tuten fucking died.

I started to see a fire burning a head but couldn't really make it out (I take my glasses off when I jog). As I got closer there's a clearing and I see a big big fire raging and no one around. So I pause a minute and fish my glasses out and find out that yes, there's 6 people standing there actually. Perfectly spaced apart from each other and they all turned at the same time to look at me.

I turned 180 and sprinted the fuck out of there

'Twas late in the fifties, enacting a plan,
When troubles were started, and problems began.
The Communist Party of China would say:
"Collectivisation's the word of the day!

"We've had it with former proceedings," said Mao -
"It's time for a leap to the here and the now!
And if there's resistance," he thought to explain,

"Exclusive production is bad for the soul -
And isn't it better to work as a whole?
It's truly unruly, and duly, I feel -
We're better investing in grain and in steel!

"Let's shake-up and make-up a future, my friends -
And when the adventure succeeds in its ends,

Well, the decision of Inalchuq, the governor of the Khwarazmian city of Otrar, to attack Genghis Khan's trade caravan was pretty bad. Khan was famous as a ruthless warlord, not the sort of guy you want to piss off.

But maybe they could have got away with it. Genghis sent three ambassadors to negotiate a settlement.

Which is when Muhammad II, the Shah of of Khwarzem, made the really bad decision to kill one of these ambassadors and send the other two back without their beards as a sign of humiliation.

Genghis Kahn was so enraged he assembled an army and destroyed the Khwarazmian Empire. Wiped out every town they had. He even re-routed a river to wipe out the village where the Shah was born, wiping it off the map. By 1120 there wasn't much of anything left.

So, both Inalchuq or Muhammad II of Khwarzem qualify. Take your pick.

"The Mongols seized Otrar, which must have been particularly satisfying for Genghis Khan, given it was the same city that Inalchuq governed. ## #2499 – Redditors who clean up crime scenes - what's the most bizarre thing you've witnessed? 2019-06-11 16:00:58

/u/WhatYouSoundLike_rn

/u/shahajada12

I don't clean up crime scenes, but I do remove the deceased.
I can get into more accurate detail of the deceased but..
here's some general stuff.

Hoarders are a lot more common than they really should be, first of all. And it's never a clean hoard. It's piles of junk covered in several types of urine, shit and vomit. Molds I've never seen before, and probably insects that haven't even been discovered yet. I understand when the emergency services don't want to be in that kind of house longer than they have to, but I'll never forget having to ask them to help me because I couldn't distinguish what was actually the deceased, and what was just a pile of random shit that looked more human than the deceased did.

People will warn you bodies will bloat, and touching them the wrong way will make them leak. But the image your conjuring up doesn't even hold a light to what it can be like. Insects skittering when you delicately lift a 400lbs deceased onto your cot, because one wrong move and they will start oozing.

Oh, and the ones who had pets who were so desperate they had to eat their owner. Staring into the eyes of a big, browned eyed mutt who is happy to finally receive human contact, and all you can't think about is how the deceased is missing their entire face. Poor things were just hungry, but it's unsettling.

These little game coupons that our teacher gave out for winning class quiz games. Right when people were starting to get scanners/printers in their own homes some kid made copies of his coupons and sold or traded them to other students.

Edit: since I have some people asking what the coupons could be traded for it was usually a piece of candy or a pencil with a fun print or something similar. I think the kids ended up getting caught like two weeks into the scheme

/u/JojenCopyPaste

And that's how you first learned about inflation

/u/Laser_Dogg

In a similar vein, our high school school had "homework passes" redeemable across all classes. You could use them as either 1 free pass for a homework assignment or 1 day delay on a large report. They even had a "void" message if copied.

The teachers got them from the principal at the beginning of each quarter and they passed them out with wild abandon to anyone showing interest in class. The market was flooded. I'd buy them from kids for $2 each. Then I'd wait. At the end of the quarter larger reports would be due. Rich kids would buy them back from me for $25-$50 each. I once made $370 in the last 5 days of the quarter.

Whatever I earned, I'd typically only use a total of $15-20 to buy the next wave of homework passes. The rest was mine to keep.

It all started with a single .75 cent investment, and that was the only bit of money I ever paid from my own pocket to keep it going.

There's really, quite clearly just one thing to do -
A choice to be taking and making for you.

Of course you will worry and fret for yourself -

I know a couple that broke up about a year ago. They still are friends though and work together and I'm not supposed to tell anyone they broke up. After this long I wonder if it's just a long, elaborate test of my loyalty *guys the test part was a joke. They're not evil humans lol, just private /u/actuallywaffles

Ex and I broke up amicably, and for a good year after we didn't tell anyone. Over time people kinda just figure it out on their own. I don't think they'd get mad if you did end up telling people, but it's at least nice of you to value them enough to keep things a secret if they haven't decided to share them with others

/u/holamiamor

Girlfriend just broke up with me and I'm trying to understand amicable break ups. Essentially, she just doesn't love me in a romantic way anymore. We both acknowledge that we have in the past/might in the future (depending on what I want) have an awesome friendship.

Sorry for hijacking this, but I'm struggling to see how a break up can be truly amicable. Like 50/50. Can you provide some insight?

/u/jkkj1234

This doesn't answer your question, but I personally have never really had any amicable break ups. With time they've come to be pretty meaningless—as in, I don't harbor any resentment—but I'm not friends with those people anymore. Which is just to say...if it doesn't work out amicably and you just want space, don't feel bad. That's totally normal and acceptable too.

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 5  × 7  × 2

You've woken for days and for weeks with her there -
You've spoken of chances and futures you'll share -
And though there was trouble and worry and doubt -
Perhaps you were hoping you'd just work it out.

Perhaps you agreed it's the right thing to do -
She isn't, she wasn't the person for you -
And though you had tried and you'd hoped that you were -
You're clearly not really the right one for her.

Whatever the reason, you have to decide -
That can you be happy just there by her side?
If something within you is telling you no -
The answer is certain.

You just have to go.

I saw three deer corner a small child and eat his ice-cream.
Child was screaming like Dio whilst his Japanese mother filmed the whole thing cackling to herself.

Metal.

Edit: Since im getting a lot of comments, this wasn't Nara, it was the Island of Miyajima next to Hiroshima. Still Japanese deer though.

I feel like the deer in Nara and whatever hell creature spawned in Australia might have different dispositions.

/u/aartadventure

My husband was force to flee in terror as a group of deer began to close in to attack for sembei. He had to run while tossing sembei in a frantic dance. I of course stood back filming and laughing my ass off (although I was worried for a few moments as they lunged forward and snapped at his hands)

When Little Timmy saw a deer,
One splendid summer's dawn -
He watched with hope and joyful cheer
This dainty spotted fawn.

“But what more perfect beast,” said he,
”Could overshadow this?
’Tis such a darling thing to see
An ungulate of bliss.

“I love you, tiny dearest doe,”
He softly spoke and sighed.

But deers are fully metal, bro.
And Timmy fucking died.

Tell my Dad who was in the hospital two weeks away from his own death that his father had died. Dad hadn't yet accepted that he, himself was dying, though my sister and I could see it. Grandpa had been in hospice for two months so we all knew that his end was near. In the week between Grandpa's death and his funeral, Dad began to accept that he didn't have much time left. Dad made it to Grandpa's funeral, albeit via ambulance/wheelchair, and saw his extended family for the last time. That was a surreal experience for me, watching him say goodbye.
edit: typo

/u/WildBruntta

That must've been heart breaking for you

/u/Dippy_Egg

It was. I had buried my mom, Mom's mom, and Dad's mom at the rate of one funeral every 13-14 months for the years directly preceding Dad's death (a total of five funerals in less than five years), and been responsible for Dad's end of life medical care and decision making, so I was all but numb by that time. Still hurt to watch the realization hit him. And to watch the realization hit everyone else that my Dad wasn't going to last much longer when they saw him at the funeral... again, surreal.

That's a lot for 1 person

/u/Poem_for_your_sprog [Link]  × 5  × 8  × 1

You won't always,
don't always
get what you need -
And try as you will,
you won't always succeed -
And sometimes you'll struggle,
And sometimes you'll doubt -
And sometimes you'll work,
But it just won't work out.

It's toil and it's trouble,
This troubling life -
It's juggling stress,
And it's struggle and strife -
It's bearing the bad times,
And riding the rough -
It's knowing you tried,
But it wasn't enough.

But try all the same,
With a hope in your heart -
Be sad but be strong,
And be ready to start -
The bad times will hurt,
And the dreadful times too -
You have to survive them.

It's all you can do.

Tell my dad who had dementia my mother passed away from cancer

/u/my_name_is_cow

This is so painfully familiar.

My dad kept forgetting and if I'm 100% honest, I stopped telling him after a while. When he asked where she was or when she was coming home, I would just say that she would be coming home "later" and tell him not to worry. I tried to be honest initially, but this was much kinder I think.

“But when will she?” you will wonder,
And I’ll tell you and you’ll weep -
And your cries will take you under
As you’re drifting off to sleep.

I could say it when you’ve woken -
I could speak the words and then -
When you’ve heard them softly spoken,
I could break your heart again.

I could find a way to say it
So that maybe they would stay -
But you’ll ask me to convey it
Just the same tomorrow day.

So I know what I will tell you
When you wake this afternoon.

It’s the kindest lie to sell you.

I will answer: ”... maybe soon.”

Arcades for sure. My dad used to drop me off at a nickel arcade with 5 bucks. I felt like a KING.

/u/cpeezi

This is a big one for me. Arcades were how my dad and I bonded when I was really young. There was one in our mall growing up called "Pocket Change" and we would always go race each other or shoot aliens together. I miss that place.

/u/tbl44

I never got into arcades because by the time I was old enough to be any good at video games (around 2002-2004) basically every arcade game I encountered was $1-2 per play, and I didn't think it was fun to blow a whole $2 on one or two tries on a video game. Especially when I had an N64 at home. It's a shame that everything costs so much nowadays, especially here in Canada with our trash dollar.

/u/Aaod

I ran into the same issue why would I spend 1-2 dollars per play when I could just save my money and spend 50 on an entire game I can play all I want? They raised costs at the same time wages were stagnating and the price of their primary competitor was dropping. Plus I don't have to deal with a good 25% of the machines being broken or having issues because the owner is too cheap to repair them.

Though yesterday's over and time is a blur -
How well I remember the way that we were.
The summers we spent by that shining machine -
The days and the nights in the lights of the screen.

How well I remember the three of us then -
I think of us often, again and again.
I think of us always, uneager to part -
The sound of the nickel,
The tune at the start.

But one day we didn't.
I can't think of why.
The summer was finished, and days passed us by -
And yesterday's over and time is a blur.

How well I remember the way that we were.

12 year old me misses Toys R Us. My son will more than likley never experience the joy of being let loose in a giant toy store.

He walked by the shelving and there he espied -
A robot with gadgets and gizmos inside -
A set for constructing a marble-run maze -
A tool box with toys that would last him for days.

He sighted a slinky,
a long plastic sword -
A blue walkie-talkie,
a black fingerboard -
A barrel of monkeys,
a big yellow trike -
A red metal train-set,
a yoyo,
a bike.

He saw by the doorway a swing-set and slide -
A wood rubber band gun with targets beside -
A world of excitement contained in a store.

He saw it.

He saw it.

He sees it no more.

TL;DR at the bottom

My old boss, who is married, has several kids, and lives a relatively successful life, used to have a shed that had an attic that was always locked. One day I was getting some fertilizer and mulch out of the shed and I noticed the attic door was propped open. My boss was off the property and I decided to sneak inside to take a peek. The moment I walked up the stairs there were two massive pannels of plywood that had cutouts of nudes from Playboys and colaged together to make a giant 5x20 porn wall. A little further down he had like two magazine racks with literally hundreds of Playboys and an entire cabinet filled with vhs tapes and DVDs. Like it was his jackshack or something.

Edit: I have a video I took of the porn wall I can upload once I find it in my phone

Edit 2: found it! here is the video of the spanktuary \(NSFW\), sorry for the quality I recorded it a few years ago

All that to say that I was accused of stealing one of his VHS tapes. Like the dude literally walked up to me (a high school student) and was like did you steal anything from my attic. I just played dumb and acted like I had no idea what he was talking about. He called my parents at one point and told them what he thought had happened. My parents believed me for the most part. The craziest part of the whole thing is the tape showed up two weeks later. Turns out his adult son just dropped by and “borrowed” it without telling his dad. On the bright side, my boss called my parents and apologized and told them about the misunderstanding. I ended up quitting not too long after that.

Some after thoughts: Having a secret porn attic? Okay, fine. I get it. But the dude got straight up crafty and went full blown grandma making a porn collage like it was a quilt or something. The guy literally had a desk with an ongoing project, he had an exacto-knife (because scissors aren't precise enough I guess), and the man had some of those glue sticks like it was a middle school art project. I can already see the conversations he has with his wife, "honey, if you need me I'll be out in the shed doing a little.. woodworking"
TL;DR: Boss had a locked door in his shed, one day it was left open, I walked up there to find hidden Playboy cutouts meticulously glued onto a couple of pieces of plywood. He accused me of stealing one of his VHS tapes, only to find out that his adult son had borrowed it without asking.

/u/TheInfinityDuck

I admire this level of dedication

There were boobies on the ceiling,
There were hooters on the floor -
There were bouncers there revealing
Many melons on the door.

There were bulbous nipples titties,
There were bosoms,
there were breasts -
There were swollen swinging pretties,
There were buxom heaving chests -

And wherever I was looking,
And no matter where I stared -
There was something curvy cooking,
There was something better paired.

So I reached a hand and stretched it,
And I touched it, thunderstruck -
And I chose a pic and fetched it,
And my fingers sort of...

... stuck.

Used to be a lifeguard and decided to take a break to walk the dog in the bathroom. Only had some family bathrooms not really any men or women designated areas. So I sit down and whip out the ol' mobile device and start yankin' the chain, when all of the sudden the door begins to open up and a younger dad who doesn't know how to knock (my fault I didn't lock it), decides that he is gonna walk right in. He then looks at me as I've got my dick in one hand and my phone in the other and turns to his wife (who couldn't see me) and says, "let's not use this one, it's pretty dirty." He backed out and closed the door.

I have never felt so relieved but so traumatized and a little mad. Mostly because he called me dirty lol

EDIT: Just wanna say that this was about 6 years ago when I was 15 and single

/u/HalcyonicValkyrie

That's kind of a bro moment though. He basically saved you from even more humiliation

He looked at my penis.

I held it at bay.

We stared in the silence with nothing to say.
Unlikely the vision he thought that he'd find.
"What is it?" a voice came inquiring behind.

He looked at my penis.

I held it inert.

A bare-bottomed fellow in only a shirt.
A fist on a phallus.
A grip on a gland.
The member, remember, remained in my hand.

He looked at my penis.

I held it in shame.

With only my lusty libido to blame.
"What is it?" the voice came inquiring for more.

"... it's nothing," he whispered,
and thus shut the door.

I met a guy online, we really got on and he came over a few times so we could hang out. I did find him attractive and tried to hint that I was into him (note, I can't flirt to save my life) but nothing ever happened. After a few "dates" he suddenly vanished offline. No social media, he wasn't answering texts or emails, nothing. I thought he'd ghosted me. After 6 months he reappears, I asked him where he'd been and he said "I don't want to talk about it".

A few weeks after, there was a fad where people were googling their names and posting humorous stories they had found about similar people with their name (mine was about a ship that had my initials) and I started to google friends names just out of boredom/morbid curiosity, googled his name and found a local news story from his area, one of those “crime and courts” things that he had been done for statutory rape of a minor, online grooming and had his computer and phone seized as evidence.

/u/lovelovelovie

We were friends online for years. We’d meet up every so often and when we started families we’d meet up and take the kids to the zoos or whatever. She wanted us to go on a cruise together, with our husbands and kids. I made the comment towards the effect of “We can’t afford that”, and she went nuts. We shouldn’t have had kids if we can’t afford them, we shouldn’t have more children, our life sucks blah blah blah because I didn’t want to go on a goddamn cruise with her and her bratty ass kid. Sounds like a nightmare.

/u/FreakyDarling85

I love how “we can’t afford a cruise” turned into “you can’t afford your whole life, you irresponsible pleb”.

/u/lovelovelovie

Right? I told her that the last I checked cruises weren’t essential to child development and she rebutted with THERE ARE FINANCE OPTIONS.

Bitch I’m not trying to finance a cruise.

“I can’t afford a cruise,” said she,
”With rent and taxes too.
But that’s all right -
it seems to me
We’ve other things to do.

“We’ll make our way to walk the park -
We’ll search for shooting stars -
We’ll stay up late and after dark,
We’ll spy the Moon and Mars.

“We’ll take a stroll along the tide -
We’ll see the rolling sea -
’Cause after all,” she said and sighed,
”The best of life is free.”

And so she slowly shook her head:
”We don’t need something new -
Just something made for us,” she said.

Her friend replied: ”... fuck you.”

/u/MasterMongrel345

/u/TheRealReapz

Technically not a tourist guide but I was doing a tour of our production facility to some people from head office. As we got to one of the pallet out-feeds, I mentioned the light curtain which was a safety feature that stopped the conveyors once the light was broken, and so for some damn reason one of the ladies decides to stick her hand through the light to test it, stopping the production line and also risking her safety by doing it in the first place.

I asked her not to do that again and went about resetting the machine to start up again. No more than 3 seconds after doing so she stuck her hand through the curtain again stopping everything. She looked at me with the most stupid expression on her face as I basically said “what the fuck”. To this day I don’t know why she did it or what her deal was.

“This thing right here you mustn’t touch -
This thing right here ahead -
You must not touch this thing and such,
Don’t touch this thing,” he said.

So Bob walked off and sighed.

And Little Timmy touched the thing.

Not a tour guide but i was on a tour around Auschwitz once where two youngish (18-20 year old) Italians were taking selfies.

A second thing that happened on that tour that wasn't particularly bad but was humbling was that there was an older English lady, who used a portable mobility scooter when the walking was too much, complained that some of the buildings didn't have access for it. The tour guide pointed out that that was because people who couldn't get up steps would have been gassed on arrival.

EDIT: Spelt Auschwitz wrong

EDIT NUMBER 2 Auschwitz seems to be getting a lot of shit for not having disabled access, it does. In this instance the ladies scooter could not enter this particular building as it didn't have a reverse and would not be able to turn around at the end of the building, there was a wheelchair ramp. Auschwitz themselves say this on their website: Disabled. Because of the need to preserve the historical authenticity of the site of the Memorial it may be difficult for dissabled persons to move around the grounds and buildings. In order to help visitors with disabilities wheelchairs are available free of charge at the Visitor Service Centre.

/u/the_village_bicycle

Wow, that oughta humble her

They gathered together and grinned for a pic.

#2458 – What's the best job for a lazy person? 2019-05-13 19:01:36

/u/swilmann

/u/Smitty_Oom

Toll booth worker.

/u/realultralord

In middle school I had a classmate who did a four-week internship at a company where they sent him to the gateman. We had some forms to fill for our report in school and this guy just wrote the “most awesome stories” the gateman had to tell about his job.

My favorite was:

“When I’m bored, and I am damn often bored, I act entitled and ‘punish’ those drivers who ring the bell angrily. I then let them wait for an extra 20 seconds before I let them in.”

Answering my classmates question: “What was the most critical situation at your job?” the gateman said:

“I once went to the toilet. It was one of these boring friday afternoons where no-fucking-body comes in as folks are home early. When I came back, I found one of our customers with his whole fucking entourage queueing up at the gate. Three fucking vehicles! I dropped my newspaper and hit that gate-open-button like it could save my life AND BOY IT DID. They just drove past my booth. Lucky me. And that’s the story when my bowel movement almost cost me my job.”

When I'm bored, and I am damn often bored, I act entitled and 'punish' those drivers who ring the bell angrily. I then let them wait for an extra 20 seconds before I let them in...

You can sit there slowly ageing,
You can ring the bell irate -
And you might be madly raging,
But I'm keeper of the gate.

You can get all agitated,
You can curse your fury fate -
And you might be aggravated,
But I'm keeper of the gate.

You can blast my name on twitter,
You can argue and berate -
And you might be getting bitter,
But I'm keeper of the gate.

You can sit there busy hating,
'Cause you know it's getting late -
For you might be sick of waiting...

But I'm keeper of the gate.

The Silence of the Lambs

/u/IOsonCalaf

I'm imagine a bunch of lambs just standing around staring at the cameras.

One of my teachers made the class watch a religious black and white art film movie about a little girl and a goat wondering around. The girl dies and the movie literally just follows the goat around for an hour. So I can imagine.

They watched and they waited.
They stayed and they stared.
In silence,
they gathered.
In silence,
they glared.
They stood without motion.
They lingered and then -
They waited.
They waited.
They waited again.

‘Twas still as a painting.
’Twas silent as night.
Just dark empty faces in soft woollen white.
Just nothing,
but nothing,
and nothing, to wit:

They watched and they waited.

He said: ” ... is this it?”

... I have the exact same feeling...

When he hears the sound, he sees it -
When he wakes, it's there ahead -
For that music softly frees it
From the cage inside his head.

He can feel the bullets flying -
He can sense the fallen men -

And it leaves him lost and sore -

But it's really quite confusing,
Cause he's never been to war.

You could probably even explain the battery and sell it to an ambitious industrialist. “If you can sort out generating the power, it would work forever.” The first electric generator was invented in 1831 so someone was probably working on it.

/u/johnsnowthrow

It's actually not hard to build a charger. The problem is getting steady current at 5V when you don't have a great way of measuring voltage.

/u/Vectorman1989

Putting the intricate charger pins together might be fiddly

/u/Gonzobot

You'd be far better served with disassembling to charge the battery directly without involving the software circuits. It'll even compensate for some line variance in the voltage that way, rather than giving you some stupid USB protocol error and shitting the bed.

When Little Timmy did a poop,
One fine but fateful night -
He felt a pinch beneath his hoop,
And cursed his painful plight.

“Oh deary me,” he whined with woe,
And fretful, frightened dread -
”I feel a stinging sense below - Perhaps it's piles,” he said.

So Timmy reached his hands behind,
Beneath, below, beside -
And Little Timmy lost his mind.

And Timmy fucking died.

And out from the vapor, he stepped to below.

He saw his descendant.

When I graduated college, my mom casually dropped the fact that she, a tiny little Asian woman, used to deal large quantities of marijuana when she was in high school, and once had to skip a basketball game because she accidentally took a duffel bag full of weed to school instead of her gym bag.

/u/flekkzo

So I guess that's how she paid for your college education?

/u/WaluigiIsTheRealHero

I wish. Nah, she just made me work my ass off until I earned scholarships.

That's a good parent.

“Do not sell weed,” she spoke, severe -
”I do not, do not want to hear,
In times of darkness, doubt or dread,
You’ve turned your hand to that,” she said.

“It takes a fool to see the world,
With all the days ahead unfurled,
And all this life,
With all you need,
Who opts to spend it pushing weed.

“Do not sell weed,” she sadly said -
She sighed aloud and shook her head.
”Do not be weak, and don’t begin.

Do not sell weed.

Sell vicodin.”

Proposed to my college girlfriend when I was 20 and she was 21. We had been dating for a year and she got pregnant. I thought we were in love because everything was great and I genuinely loved her. I had a great job and so I proposed because I wanted to marry her and start a family. She then broke down and started crying, she told me she had been sleeping with her ex boyfriend for the past month. She then said that she didn't know who the baby belonged to so went and got an abortion without consulting me or him. She got back together with him and I spiraled into alcoholism for the next few years.

Im about to turn 30 now, went back to college 2 years ago and no longer use drugs or alcohol (besides weed sometimes). I'm starting life over again at 30 after all that, and having to take care of my grandfather who had a stroke. Life is fuckin weird.

Edit: Oh my gosh guys. I had no idea this would get so much attention, I'm trying to reply to comments but my inbox is exploding. Thank you so much for the gold and silver and all the kind words. Your replies have been so inspiring.

/u/GreyW01f14

My guy this hurts to hear.

Had similar issues around that age that really put college/life in general on pause while I reassessed decisions. Now 27 and getting it put back together.

Sometimes you gotta learn lessons the hard way. I'm glad you came out the other side and are moving forward.

/u/rapey_tree_salesman

Thank you. Sorry to hear you had to experience something similar. It was an experience. I learned a lot from it, and the job I had was great for someone in their 20s but it was dead end and I probably would have never been able to go back to school. In some ways it's good that it happened that way. I didn't get stuck in a marriage with a secretly awful person and I got to care for and spend time with my grandfather before he passed. The only bad experiences are ones you don't learn from.

Sometimes you gotta learn lessons the hard way...
The only bad experiences are the ones you don't learn from...

The hardest lessons learned in life
Are dealt and earned with grief -
A hundred spans of pain and strife;
A stretch of lost belief.

No matter what, or why, or when,
Or how, and who's to blame -
It comes around, and comes again,
And always hurts the same.

I've failed a thousand times before.

I've felt my chances fall.

I'd rather fail a thousand more
Than never try at all.

3 year old is preparing for his bath. His underwear looks strange but I'm distracted his brother. Kid takes off one pair of underwear, then a 2nd pair, then a 3rd. I ask why he is wearing 3 pairs of underwear. Kid looks at me like I'm an idiot, "Mom told me to put on a clean pair every day".

That nonautistic kid grew up to place the highest in math in our large Midwestern city. But even in his 20's you have to make sure you give clear instructions as he will follow rules to the letter.

Edit:. Aw great my best comment and I'll probably delete it. I would never want my kid to see it and believe I really think he is an idiot...

Edit2:. My wife works in education and specializes in autism. Not autistic - I'm sure we could have found someone to make a spectrum diagnosis; but we, especially my wife, saw no advantage in doing so. She is as wary of the educational industrial complex almost as much as Eisenhower was of the military industry.

And for crying loud, a 3 year old doesn't need a bath every day. Are you people serious? Anything more frequent than a week was unheard of until 50 years ago and beyond the 1st world this is still the case. Feel free to do with yours what you wish. When I was a senior resident a young man (late 20s) was admitted for pneumonia. He got worse quickly and I was called to his room to help while on call that night. He was having trouble breathing and needed intubated. I explained all this to him and that I would sedate him and then get him intubated so we could help him breathe. He agreed and we got everything ready. The last thing he said to me was "Doc, please don't let me die." I told him I would do my very best. I got him intubated and transferred to the ICU. A few weeks later I was on call covering the ICU and he was barely hanging on. I knew he would not make it through the night. He went into V-fib several times and I was able to bring him back, but only briefly. He was just too sick and he died shortly after that. It was horrible talking to his mother and girlfriend and comforting them knowing the last words he ever spoke were to me saying please don't let me die.

I've been a medic for 20 years. I have helped countless patients survive (and far too many that didn't,) to the point of questioning my own sanity. Your single comment has just made one of the most profound changes in my own life. This is absolutely the best way I've ever heard it described. I used to feel like I was a failure or didn't do enough if the pt didn't pull through. Now, I see it was a knock-down-drag-our battle for their life.

/u/sortaplainnonjane

In medic training, they said there were 3 kinds of patients: those who will die no matter what, those who will live no matter what, and those who need your help to live. I found it somewhat comforting to be so bluntly told that some will die even if you do absolutely everything you can. Sadly, we cannot save everyone.

And as the stars were shining bright,
He wiped a tear and looked at me,
Forlorn and lost and plagued with plight,
And in the silence there he sat,
A mournful shape upon my bed
That softly gave my arm a pat
And sighed, distressed, and sadly said:

“Goodnight my darling son, my boy,
My days, my dreams, my hope, my heart,
How sweet it is to feel such joy,

I used to do IT support for a charity that supplied housing and support for homeless people. A large proportion also had mental health issues, so there were a fair amount of ‘interesting’ events that happened. Being in IT, I avoided experiencing most of it first hand, (though I was threatened with being stabbed on about my third day!)

Anyway, I come in one monday, and there’s an email labelled ‘urgent’, saying there was an incident at the stairwell of one of the properties on sunday night, and could I pull the relevant CCTV footage and put it on a DVD. I had to do this fairly frequently, I skip through the footage, find the incident (usually a fight or blatant drug-dealing) and burn it to DVD for the police.

The email never mentioned what the incident was, so I skip through the footage, and watch as a clearly very agitated man ties a rope around a stair rail at the top of the stairs, then his neck, looks over the rail and then just casually tips forward over it. The rope flipped him round, and he dangled there twitching for far too long, before he just stopped. So yeah, that was a fun monday.

Was a security coordinator for a large electric company and had access to like 80+ facility's CCTV infrastructures. Was doing maintenance check on some random train station at like 3 AM, panned a camera as far to the right as possible to check that it was functioning, and this dude was on all fours eating a deer in the middle of the tracks. Watched him for like 10 minutes and went to get the other guy on shift, when I came back, the dude was gone. Rewound it, and the dude stopped munching on the carcass, wiped the gore off his face, and walked into the woods like he didn't have a care in the world.

Thank you all for the Gold and Silver :)

Read all the comments most asked questions and answers that I noticed:

Where did this happen? Iowa

Why did you just stand there like a dumb ass? Was late at night at a middle of a long shift, also didn't really process wtf was happening. Kinda forgot I had someone else in the office that could come over and see wtf was going on.

What was he wearing? Was kinda hard to tell, as the CCTV was basically filming at the end of its effective view, looked like he was wearing some kinda heavy outer wear, like something you would work outside in the winter with. It was late fall, so nights would dip into the 30s.

Pics or it didn't happen. Part of the job was a very restrictive NDA, as in you can't bring any sort of recording out of the facility. I wasn't even allowed to bring a note pad with my nightly notes out of the office. Plus this was before most people had decent cameras on their phones. We still were using film cameras to do most documentation.

Rips at skin with teeth like pins.
Scoops the chunks and starts to smile.
Holds them in his hands a while.

“SNIFF AND SNIFF AND SNIFF,” he speaks.
Spreads the gore upon his cheeks.
Runs his tongue in clotted hair.
Takes a whiff of meaty air.

“CRUNCH AND MUNCH FOR LUNCH,” says he.
Holds the lumps with greedy glee.
Smells the scent and oh, it's sweet.

My Dad has been growing some apparently fantastic weed for over 50 years now, that's how he made car payments when he was unemployed for a few years, even though he could have worked but didn't. He's got a lot of nice things that are above his employment level. Didn't register why until Mom told us who used to be her supplier when she was in her hippy days.

Last I checked, years ago, he had the trust of numerous private landowners and the keys to the gates. They let him build and maintain feed plots for deer and turkey, so he can have his own private hunting land and be out on his own, but I'm pretty sure I know how he pays and is paid now.

Real country, this place. Fenced-off gates to roads you have to go on foot through thick foliage, to get around the gate that's blocking the only road in. Good 10 miles from the nearest police station, some of those plots. As close as he is to the Sheriff, I'm pretty sure he gets passes from the law for various reasons.

My Dad. This boring loner who's never been in trouble in his life. A real square who married a free love hippy. A weed outlaw.
